A correspondent writes:—"The exports to the United Kingdom from China alone amounted to nearly ten millions sterling in 1882, and are ever increasing. To protect our commerce we have an obsolete ironclad, the Audacious, on which a large sum was expended, prior to her departure from England, to make her as nearly efficient as possible, but she would stand but small chance with the French flagship Victorieuse, now stationed in Chinese waters. Next we have three corvettes of the 'C' class, which are intended to prey upon the enemy's commerce; but with the bottom fairly clean and all stores on board, no more than 13 knots could be reasonably got out of these vessels, and this only by using the blast. They also only carry coal sufficient for four-and-a-half days' full speed, and although these ships were designed to be able to keep the sea under sail, I cannot help thinking that few captains would care to be hampered by a lot of useless spars, and would probably have to return all yards, booms, &c., into store, and rely on steam power alone. Thus it will be seen that a trading steamer would have little to fear from one of these ships. Gun-vessels and gun-boats help to swell the list of the Chinese Squadron, and they are perhaps the most efficient vessels we have out there. The Wivern, now at Hong Kong, is only fit for harbour service, and when she first went out in 1880 grave fears were entertained as to her ability to reach her destination. Until the arrival of the Audacious there were no torpedo-boats on the station, but the Russians at that time had no less than eight laid up at Vladivostock. With a large Naval yard, and good facilities for stowage, there should, at least, be no difficulty about these. One might say that Hong Kong is quite unprotected. There is absolutely nothing, except a battalion of the Line and some Artillery, to prevent an enemy's fleet from taking possession of the place. Nature has so constructed it that with a small expenditure the island might be made impregnable. Some time ago, a system of defence by means of torpedoes was being inaugurated, but I am unable to state how much has been accomplished. Again, Singapore has one fort which only commands the roadstead, another overlooking the New Harbour. But the place being such a great commercial and shipping emporium, should have a chain of forts. I think that enough has been said to show that our Fleet in Chinese waters is a long way behind in everything, except officers and men."

NAVAL TITLES.

A "Senior Lieutenant" says:—"You echo the sentiments of all lieutenants when you remark that the creating of a new rank and title would be most unpopular. What we want is substance, not shadow! A lieutenant will remain a lieutenant to all intents and purposes, till he is promoted to commander, whether they call him lieutenant-commander, or deputy-assistant-commander, or give him any other long-winded title. By all means, let us have the extra pay, but we want no more new titles or more gold lace. Let us hope we have seen the last of trying to smooth down real grievances with extra rank, extra lace, and extra titles."

COURTS-MARTIAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—May I suggest that the number of courts-martial might be considerably reduced, if the powers of commanding officers were made to correspond with the powers at present vested in regimental courts? I think that every officer of any regimental experience will agree with me in deprecating the utter waste of time that is involved by the numerous regimental courts, which, for the most part, are assembled to prove that Pte. Smith is deficient of sundry articles that he should have, and to award imprisonment and stoppages accordingly, all of which could be done in five minutes by his commanding officer, instead of wasting the time of president, members, prosecutor, and witnesses to an almost unlimited extent. The aggregate number of courts-martial by no means represents the number of men tried, as the same men are often tried over and over again,—in fact, some like it. If commanding officers had more power of punishment, and more facilities for getting rid of black-sheep, the Army would benefit in every way. But perhaps men (or boys) are so scarce, that even the black-sheep cannot be spared!—I am, &c., FUSILIER.

Regarding the state of things existing on the West Coast of Africa, the correspondent of the Hampshire Telegraph writes:—"The German corvette Sophie, after taking the Crown Prince to Spain, proceeded to the West Coast of Africa to visit the German factories at Little Popo, where the natives have been maltreating German subjects. The native chiefs at once acceded to the demands of Capt. von Stubenrauch, who, believing all differences to have been amicably arranged, weighed and proceeded for Lagos, anchoring for the night at Grand Popo. Here he was overtaken by a special messenger from the German factory bearing the news that, no sooner had the Sophie left Little Popo, than the natives attacked the factory, and had fearfully maltreated the German residents. Capt. von Stubenrauch at once weighed and returned to Little Popo, and without further notice landed 124 men, who forthwith formed a cordon round the place. The chiefs, headed, it is said, by one Lawson, an employé of the English Government, showed fight, and lost one man killed and 11 wounded before Lawson and the chiefs were made prisoners, and order restored. Lawson was handed over to the Governor of Lagos, on the latter undertaking not to allow him to return to Little Popo. The native chiefs were detained on board, and are being brought home to Germany. This news was sent to the German papers from Lagos on March 13, and I presume the English Government will make inquiries as to Mr. Lawson's doings, as it is not usual for 'British inspectors' to head natives in an attack on the subjects of a friendly European nation, much less against an armed force of one of the Great Powers. Surely the Weser Zeitung has been misinformed." The Sophie put into Plymouth last week on her way to Kiel.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS, Etc.

GENERAL OFFICER.—We have not made any mention of the movements to which you allude, because we consider it exceedingly injudicious, and calculated to defeat the purpose in view. A petition of such a character can possess but little weight unless it be signed by such overwhelming masses of the people, and backed up by names of such weight, as will break down the opposition which would unquestionably be raised—cruel and vindictive as you describe it to be—to the measure which recommends itself so strongly to those who admire personal gallantry and eminent services. We have reason to believe that the movement in question has not been sanctioned by, or inspired in any way, by the gallant soldier whose interests it is meant to advance.

H.B.F., LL.D.—Thanks. We remember the meeting you refer to, in 1858, before the sword was changed for the pen. It would really be more wise (the object in view being considered) not to force the running, in this case.

INQUIRER.—Siborne's "History of the War in France and Belgium" was published by Boone in 1844. A second edition was published by Boone in 1848.

CAPE MOUNTED RIFLES.—Recruiting for this corps "is suspended, for the present."

A READER.—By general rule, the proportion is fixed according to rank. There is no distribution to staff of commanding officers as such.

MILITIA OFFICERS AND THE EXAMINATION.

"Tactics" says:—"In your journal of March 29 you remark that your strictures on the Militia officers' apathy in going up for this subject has had a desired effect. Certainly it has, but only very small it is to be regretted, as only 16 officers have been up as new candidates. Three of the number who passed in the higher division, viz., Col. Walker, of the 3rd Batn. Scots Fusiliers, Capt. Ditmas, of the 2nd Baty. 1st Brig. R.A., and Capt. Reade, of the 3rd Batn. Welsh Regt., having previously passed in the tactics examination under the Regulations first in force. The greatest credit is due to these three officers for the way in which they have sought to add to their knowledge, by troubling to go up for a further examination in a subject which is of great value, but which is far too little encouraged, and at great expenditure of time and inconvenience to themselves; and it is much to their credit in setting such an example to their service."

£160,000 FIVE-PER-CENT., PERPETUAL RENT-CHARGE, INTEREST-GUARANTEED SHARES OF

THE STRATFORD-UPON-AVON, TOWCESTER, & MIDLAND JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY.

Price £100 per £100 Certificate of 10 Shares,

In 16,000 Shares of £10 each, to be converted into Stock when fully paid up, under the title of Five-per-Cent., Perpetual Rent-charge, Interest-guaranteed Stock, guaranteed in perpetuity by a charge of £8,000 per annum, secured on the total net receipts of the East and West Junction Railway, 33 miles in length, in priority to any payment of interest or dividend on the Debenture or Share Capital of that Company, amounting to upwards of £950,000. Pursuant to Special Act of Parliament passed last Session. These Shares are further entitled to participate in the surplus income of the Stratford-upon-Avon, Towcester, and Midland Junction Railway, as hereafter mentioned.

The Shares now for Subscription have thus not only 5 per cent. guaranteed in perpetuity, secured by the 33 miles of the East and West Junction Railway, but will also participate in the surplus income of the Stratford-upon-Avon, Towcester, and Midland Junction Railway, 11½ miles in length.

When the fact is stated that the Stratford-upon-Avon Railway Company, whose line runs from Hatton Junction to Stratford-upon-Avon, have for some years past paid 8 per cent. dividend upon their Ordinary Shares, and that the Great Western Railway Company have purchased the Line, paying for it in £135 Great Western Railway Stock for each £100 Stratford-upon-Avon Share, which, at the price of Great Western Stock, viz., £141 per cent., is equal to £190 cash for each £100 Stratford-upon-Avon Share, an estimate may be formed of the future value of the Shares for Subscription.

The Directors of the Stratford-upon-Avon, Towcester, and Midland Junction Railway Company are prepared to receive SUBSCRIPTIONS for the above Shares, which, when fully paid up, will be converted into Stock, under the title, as above stated, of Five-per-Cent., Perpetual Rent-charge, Interest-guaranteed Stock.

Price of Subscription, £100 per Provisional Certificate of 10 Shares of £10 each (representing £100 Stock), payable as follows :—£5 for each Certificate applied for payable on Application, £20 on Allotment, £25 on May 1, 1884, £25 on June 1, 1884, £25 on July 1, 1884—£100 per Certificate of £100.

The Interest is payable half-yearly, on March 15 and September 15 in each year. The first payment will be made September 15 next.

Option is given to Subscribers to pay all the Instalments on Allotment, in which case Interest on the full £100 will be payable from the date of such payment; and in the case of Subscriptions paid by Instalments, Interest will be payable from the dates of their payment.

Provisional Scrip Certificates will in the first instance be issued, to be exchanged for definitive Stock Certificates when converted into Stock.

For the guidance of Subscribers, the following quotations for Guaranteed or Rent-charge Stocks will be useful, viz. :—The average quotation for Four per Cent. Stocks is £106 to £110 per £100 Stock; the average quotation for Four and a Half per Cent. Stocks is £115 to £117 per £100 Stock; the average quotation for Five per Cent. Stock is £127 to £129 per £100 Stock. The above quotations are for Stocks which do not participate in any Surplus Profits, nor receive more than the fixed Interest attached thereto; whilst the Shares now for Subscription will be entitled, in addition to the fixed Interest, to participate in the surplus profits of the Stratford-upon-Avon, Towcester, and Midland Junction Railway.

The price paid by the Great Western Railway for the Shares of the Stratford-upon-Avon Railway which were entitled to Surplus Profits was, as above stated, equal to £190 per £100 Stock.

Offices: 75 CORNHILL, E.C., LONDON; CORN EXCHANGE, STRATFORD-UPON-AVON.

THE STRATFORD-UPON-AVON, TOWCESTER, and MIDLAND JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY is authorised by special Acts of Parliament to relay and equip the East and West Junction Railway (Stratford-upon-Avon to Towcester), 33 miles in length, which was in 1873 opened for traffic, being laid with iron rails, now intended to be replaced with heavy steel rails; and to supply that Railway with an additional amount of rolling-stock, and further to extend their system by the construction of this Company's line from Towcester to the Midland Railway at Olney, 11½ miles in length.

The proceeds of the present issue of £160,000 will be applied to the relaying and equipment of the East and West Junction Railway, as above mentioned.

Interest at five per cent. per annum on that amount, equal to the sum of £8,000 per annum, will, upon the certificate of the Board of Trade that the above works have been carried out to their satisfaction, be payable half-yearly by the East and West Junction Railway Company to this Company, in terms and by virtue of "The Stratford-upon-Avon, Towcester, and Midland Junction Railway Act, 1883" (the amount necessary in the meantime being deposited at the Company's Bankers until September 15 next, when the works and equipment are to be completed), which provides that interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum upon any money expended by the Company under the provisions of that Act upon or in respect of the East and West Junction Railway shall be charged upon and paid out of the tolls, rates, income, and revenue derived from or arising in respect of that Railway, in priority to any payment of interest or dividend on the Debenture or Share Capital of that Company, which amounts to upwards of £950,000.

The above £8,000 per annum, as and when the same becomes payable by the East and West Junction Railway Company, will be paid to Trustees, viz. :—Samuel Lloyd, Esq., J.P., Birmingham, and Henry Merrick, Esq., Bradford-upon-Avon, Director of the Bedford and Northampton Railway Company, who have consented to act as Trustees for the holders of the Shares forming the present issue, and who, in accordance with the provisions of the Deed of Trust under which the said Shares are issued, will apply the said interest in the payment of a dividend in perpetuity of 5 per cent. per annum to the holders of the said Shares.

The Shares of the present issue, in addition to receiving interest at 5 per cent. per annum guaranteed as aforesaid, will be entitled to participate in the surplus profits arising from the working of this Company's own line.

Thus, by means of the exceptionally favourable nature of the powers conferred by the Act, the Shares of the present issue will be guaranteed a perpetual 5 per cent. interest secured by statutory charge on the rates, tolls, and revenue of 33 miles of through main route, and estimating that line's earnings to amount to only £20 net per mile per week, or £34,320 per annum, the guarantee would be more than four times covered.

Inasmuch as the gross average receipts of the Midland Railway are over £100 per mile per week, it will be seen that £40 per mile per week gross, or £20 net allowing 50 per cent. for working expenses, is a very low figure to take.

It will thus be seen that the Guaranteed Shares now for subscription present an opportunity for investment very rarely offered, combining as they do a fixed five per cent. interest in perpetuity, guaranteed by the receipts of the East and West Junction Railway, and the further right to participate in the surplus profits of the Stratford-upon-Avon, Towcester, and Midland Junction Railway; and at the price of £100 per £100 Share possess every element for an immediate increase in value when quoted on the Stock Exchange, which quotation will be applied for when they are fully paid up.

The East and West Junction Railway and the Stratford-upon-Avon, Towcester, and Midland Junction Railway are to be worked as one system, and with the Evesham, Redditch, and Stratford-upon-Avon Line, now being worked by the East and West Junction Railway, represent a length of 52 miles, and will complete the present broken communication between East and West, and connect the Midland in the West at Broom with the Midland in the East at Olney, thus affording a continuous through route for traffic, with a considerable saving of distance, as a reference to the table accompanying the prospectus clearly shows.

The works and equipment on the East and West Junction Line are under contract to be completed by September 15 next. The Company's Extension Line to Olney is under contract to be completed by September 15, 1885.

This Contract, the Deed of Trust, and the Acts of Parliament can be inspected at the Offices of the Solicitors to the Company.

Prospectuses, Maps, and Forms of Application for Shares can be obtained at the Offices of the Company, and from the Bankers and all Brokers.

75 Cornhill, E.C., London, March 28th, 1884.

All APPLICATIONS must be received by WEDNESDAY, April 9, next.

Should the applications received exceed the amount to be issued, a pro rata reduced Allotment, so far as circumstances will permit, will be made to all applicants.

The degree of finish, of course, regulates the price, but the cheapest class is capable of performing with accuracy for from fifteen to twenty-five years. As to strength and solidity, the Oroide cases are undoubtedly superior to those of gold watches. No other form of amalgam can rival Mr. Rowe's in the general essentials of a substitute for gold."

"Thousands of persons who, though not wishing to impose on their friends by a display of what is but a semblance of the real metal, have not been indisposed to find an equally good-looking metal, which, reproduced in a watch, a chain, or article of jewellery, would not be a costly thing to buy, nor a dear thing to lose." DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

COUGHS,
COLDS,
ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE. Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See the Times, July 13th, 1864.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the true Palliative in

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC for CHOLERA, DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of Diarrhœa."

From SYMES and CO., Simla:
Dear Sir,—We congratulate you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, Symes and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, his Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

EGYPTIAN NEWS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT).

Cairo, March 23, 1884.

The reason that I have not for some weeks troubled you with my correspondence is simply that the news has been of too exciting a nature to make it worth even the proverbial penny-a-line. There is no real anomaly in this excuse. The interest in Egyptian matters during the past two months has been so intense, that the very smallest piece of information has been greedily seized by the special correspondents, and telegraphed at a cost of 1s. 10d. a word to London. Under these circumstances, it is clear that Othello's occupation is gone, if Othello be a mere scribbling scribe for the weekly press. Of what use my writing you glowing accounts of the battles of Teb and Tamai, when you will already have read, marked, learnt, and forgotten the matter-of-fact statements of Mr. Scudamore in the Times, and the more picturesque, if less detailed, accounts of Mr. Cameron in the Standard? And, on the other hand, is it likely that, amidst scenes of such blood-and-thunder, your readers will evince any feverish anxiety to ascertain whether it is Major Smith or Captain Brown who is named to decide upon the merits of a condemned tin of sausages? Now, however, when the smoke has cleared away, and the smell of gunpowder become faint, it may, perhaps, be worth while to review the situation, and to strike the balance of profit and loss. To the debit side of the account must be placed, first, some 300 Englishmen, as killed or wounded; next, about 6,000 Soudanis killed, and probably an equal number wounded; and lastly, an expenditure of, let us say, one million. On the other side of the account, we may fairly claim the rescue of some seventy Egyptians from Tokar, the possibility of getting, perhaps, thirty miles nearer to Berber than formerly, and a striking example of the power of British troops to rally, even when in a panic. The advantage gained does not, at first sight, seem commensurate with the expense at which it has been obtained; but it is fair to remember that there has not yet been time to test the full effects of victories, the professed object of which is the pacification of the Soudan. And, provided that object is eventually obtained (I confess I am not sanguine of it), I am by no means prepared to endorse the hysterical outcry which is likely to be raised by a section of British public opinion against the cruelty of slaughtering "brave blacks who are fighting for the independence of their country." I know it is the fashion now-a-days to prove that our adversaries are always in the right, and that if, in addition, they should happen to be both black and naked, they are supposed to possess all the cardinal virtues; but, as your pages are hardly intended for the superior intelligence of babes, sucklings, and missionaries, I trust you will allow me to state the other side of the question. It is, of course, a very dreadful thing to take human life, but we are all ready to admit that in certain circumstances it becomes necessary, and it only becomes a crime when it is proved unnecessary. Now, the fate of the men, women, and children of Sinkat has shown us that our gallant enemy at Teb and Tamai were the first to begin the game of unnecessary slaughter; there was every reason to believe that the garrison of Tokar was going to suffer the same fate, and whether it was our duty or not, whether it was good policy or not, we were clearly not committing an inhuman act in going to relieve that garrison, so long as there was one life there. That we sought no fight is proved by the fact that we gave the rebels three chances of avoiding a conflict. Travelling through the country on a peaceful and merciful errand, we were attacked by men who did their very utmost to take our lives, who were willing to give their lives in exchange for the chance of taking ours,—and 3,000 of them did so give them. Let us do away, then, with any idea that we were the invaders of a peaceable country, and that the gallant inhabitants fell in defence of their liberties, of their native land, and so forth. We entered a country where the inhabitants are in the habit of slaying one another as a daily relaxation; we asked nothing but the release of a few miserable Egyptians. The said inhabitants, so far as we can make out, were utterly indifferent as to whom they killed, but as they had recently had a good deal of success in killing white men who came from the sea, they thought they might as well join together in killing them. After that, they could return to the more difficult pastime of killing each other. It proved that this last set of white men were of a different race, and, instead of killing them, they got killed. Well, it was bad luck, though between being killed by foreigners and being killed by each other there is little to choose. Rather a larger number has been killed in the last month than would otherwise have been in the same time, and the result will probably be, like that of an epidemic, there will probably be less killed in succeeding years until the average is redressed. What I mean is this, that in a country where every inhabitant lives by war, where every man is trying to kill his neighbour, it is useless to waste too much sentiment over loss of life. Admit that there are 6,000 men less in the world, who is the sufferer? Not themselves, for they have lived by risking their lives; not their families, in a country where a mother willingly sells her child for a few handfuls of dhurra. As for humanity generally, it probably benefits. But they are brave; well, so is a tiger, but we do not shed tears over his slaughter. I have a great admiration for a certain sort of courage, but that sort which consists in risking your own life for the mere pleasure of taking someone else's does not excite my particular admiration. Let us suppose that, through the lessons given at Teb and Tamai, the surviving population of the Eastern Soudan are rendered more tractable, come under more civilising influences, and in long course of time become a peaceable, industrious race, is the loss of some 6,000 lives of this class of savage to be considered too dear a price to pay for it? If you say that this result is improbable, well, I reply, that at all events there are 6,000 men less to live by preying upon their fellow-creatures, and that the slaughter of this month will soon be compensated for in the increased chance of life in the remainder. However, I have more compassion for your readers than for the so-called rebels, and so leave the subject. By the way, I hear that in the battle of Tamai, an enterprising correspondent managed to make use of the heliograph, and wired to Suakim frantic denunciations of the General and his Staff; that the said telegrams, getting into the hands of Admiral Hewett, got no further, and that for some time the correspondent had a warm time of it.

From Suakim reach me, too, loud whispers not all flattering to those in command. That the army was placed during the night previous to the engagement within reach of the enemy's fire we know, and it certainly does seem an arrangement not quite calculated to give the men that quiet rest so necessary before a hard day's work; but I hear, in addition, complaints that the 2nd Brigade was hurriedly formed and shaken out of order by the quickness of the march, and, worst of all, that the front face of the imperfectly-formed square was ordered to charge, while the flanks received no such order, thus leaving the gap through which the enemy entered. I hear of one gallant officer losing his head, of another refusing information sent by the Admiral, with the words,—"Bosh! we've made our arrangements, and mean to stick to them!" "So," says a correspondent, "we stuck to our arrangements, but could not stick to our position!"

From Gordon the news is black in the extreme. The policy of peace would appear to have failed, and there remains nothing but the arbitrament of war.

GENERAL GORDON'S FIRST EXPEDITION TO THE SOUDAN.

Subjoined will be found a letter from one of the members of the first expedition of General Gordon to the Soudan, giving some account of the journey from Berber and Khartoum. It will be seen that even then all was not plain-sailing, and that the relations between the General and the natives, as they are called, were by no means agreeable. In fact, how could they be so? It is not in human nature that the interference of strangers, no matter how obviously divine their mission and beneficent their object may be, should be well received by those who conceive that they have, by birth, religion, and race, certain natural rights in the country which they inhabit either to govern or misgovern their fellow-creatures. A letter from our correspondent at Cairo gives some vigorous and interesting views of the situation, but we cannot quite agree with his views, although we by no means assert that he is wrong and that we are right. It does not occur to us that, as a Christian people, we are justified in killing a certain number of savages because they kill each other when we are not there to do the business for them. Whether we are justified on other grounds must be a matter for the casuist or politician to determine:—

"Friday, May 22, 1874.
"On board paddle-boat Mtesa.

"My Dear ——,—We were getting awfully sick of Berber when Gordon turned up last Saturday, having run down from Khartoum in three days. He very nearly came to grief at one of the Cataracts. There were two men at the wheel, one wanted to go to one side of a rock and one to the other; Gordon just saved the boat by taking the helm himself, but as it was they smashed the paddles. They go down full speed, and must be generally good pilots to know the rocks and banks. Gordon asked after us all very kindly, and, of course, we told him about the major. He was very savage, but did not say much, except that he would 'arrange it,' and would place the major in a place where he would not annoy us any more. He had no right at all to give any orders; Gordon did not even know he was coming. Gordon passed the major going up, but as the major did not make any signals, Gordon took no notice of him. Col. Long, the other American, has also broken down. Gordon said he was quite done up, and said as much, that he was no use; but he took them, as being in the Viceroy's service, it cost no money. Gordon arranged that we should start in the steamer the next day (Sunday) for Khartoum, whilst he remains behind to meet Abou Saoud, and go by camel to Khartoum, about seven days' journey. In the first place, he has had serious difficulties with the Governor-General at Khartoum, about the district he was to govern. They wanted to give him a very small space between the river Soubat and the Nile down to the Lakes, but he has telegraphed to the Viceroy to say that he wishes to have more space. He was very nearly throwing up the thing, but I expect it will be all arranged. The Governor at Khartoum has despotic power; his name is Ismail Ayoub; great cruelties are going on; people sent off in chains up country, without trial. When Gordon arrived in Gondokoro, he had all the officers before him, told them he was the new Governor, and promoted them all one step. The man in power there, Raouf Bey, is also a bad one, and will do all in his power to prevent us pushing on. Gordon says Baker simply did nothing, and that the slave-trade is flourishing; he pointed out on the way three large slave stations; and Mr. Giegler who, went by caravan a few weeks ago from Berber to Khartoum, met 11 caravans of slaves. Gordon asked the people at Gondokoro who were going as slaves, if they wished to go; if they said 'yes' he let them go, if 'no' he ordered them to be given back to their families. Immediately he reached Gondokoro, natives came on board and wished to enlist; he took them, and there are 150 or 200 who will do the same. He is going to make a regiment, and told me he was going to give me power to make it up. When he arrived there first, all the people bolted, they are so frightened at white men now; he walked about distributing beads and making friends, but they think that their cattle will be stolen, as when Baker was there he used to make regular raids. Abou Saoud has great power, and is called 'Sultan' by the people. Baker, of course, will be angry when he hears Abou is going with Gordon; but one must not believe all one hears; Khartoum is an awful place for canards. Gordon has been sending presents to the different chiefs. Linant, Kemp, Anson, and Russell take steamer to Gondokoro; when we arrive there, we are 15 miles to the mountains, and make a permanent encampment; we shall have 200 soldiers armed with breechloaders, but the people will try and prevent us, they say we shall steal cattle; Gordon told them we shall bring our own cattle, then, say the soldiers, we shall be killed by the natives. It is not safe to go out alone from Gondokoro. Gordon wishes us to go about and make friends, and show the people we are different from the Arabs, and are not coming to steal cattle and children. He wishes Kemp to find if the river is navigable from Gondokoro to Lake Albert Nyanza, he is going to build two large, flat-bottomed boats, and take the small steamer (in pieces) on board, and put it on the Lakes, but as yet it is impossible to say if the thing will succeed. Gessi will remain in Khartoum, and keep his ears open, as Gessi is just the man to get hold of anything; he will report to Gordon all that he hears. He will then go up with Gordon with three steamers to the Soubat, where he will be stationed, and have his chief station at the junction of the two rivers, and from there will make excursions and make friends with the people, and will prevent arms coming into the country and slaves going out. The two Germans will also go there. Gordon will then come up to Gondokoro with Abou Saoud, and see how we are getting on, and then we shall try to get the Lakes. He says the journey to Gondokoro is awful, and when he gets there he says he will ask me whether I do not think he was right in not taking men who had any appointments to such a country. We shall be in a very fine steamer, able to do 10 knots an hour, and will run up to Gondokoro in 25 days, (D.V.) A curious fact,—Baker took 18 months to reach Gondokoro; Gordon left Cairo on Feb. 21, and has been there and down to Berber again. He said, although the Viceroy was so pleased with him, he was not showing it, referring to the case of the Governor-General at Khartoum. After a very pleasant day with Gordon, we took our leave of Berber, which I hope, with God's help, we shall see again in a few years, none the worse for our travels.

"Sunday.—It is a jolly little steamer, and went along all well until 12 o'clock, when we heard we had passed one of the sailing-boats with some of our goods on board; so we had to go back and fetch it, as Gordon wants us to tow the boats, so as not to have any delay in Khartoum. The Nile is rising rapidly. Saw numbers of pelicans, cranes, and storks. The country is well irrigated here, judging by the numbers of water-wheels. We stopped at 9.30 at Damer for the night.

"Monday.—Made an early start, and went along all well until the afternoon, when our engines broke down, and we had to wait for an hour. Amused ourselves potting at pelicans, &c., but without much success. The large boat we were towing very nearly smashed us up. She had her two big sails set, when she got a puff of wind, and was coming full butt into us, but just shaved us and carried away our ensign. Not much to see; the same sort of country, a very difficult river to navigate, especially towing, as the current comes very hard round the bends.

"Tuesday.—All well and jolly. Passed Sakada at 2.30, picked up another of our boats, but transferred the things, as we cannot tow the two. About two hours later passed a third boat, with the two Germans on board, who had started two days before us. We took them on board and left the boat behind. They were very glad, as it is being on board one of those open boats, with only a matting for a cover, as the sun is very powerful, although we generally have a good breeze. We are rather crammed now,—seven in a small steamer. The country must be populous, judging from the immense number of cattle. Engines took two hours to repair. It is lucky we have Kemp on board, for he is a good mechanical engineer. Saw some enormous crocodiles during the day, but they hear the steamer and are easily frightened. Halted at 9.30 for the night. Had some fishing, but not having proper lines, caught nothing; there must have been big fish, but I don't know what they were.

"Wednesday.—Very hot; remained below a good part of the day. Had two shots, about 200 yards, at two large crocodiles, with one of the big rifles, Reilly's No. 10; they are splendid guns, but very heavy. Arrived at Shendy in the evening, took in wood, and waited for the night. It is a good-sized town; but I did not go ashore, as my foot is bad. I ran a thorn into the heel, and cannot get it out.

"Thursday.—Did not leave Shendy until 11 a.m., as the engines had to be repaired again. We are not going tow any more, and leave the boat behind. We are just approaching a very bad bit of the Nile,—sandbanks, rapids, and rocks. About 8 o'clock we ran full speed into a sand-bank, but did no damage. If it had been a rock, we should have made a hole in our bottom. Stopped at 9 o'clock for wood.

"After a few little incidents not worth mentioning, we arrived all well in Khartoum at 12.30 a.m., Sunday, 24th. The part that you see from the river is rather wretched-looking. Directly we stopped lots of people came on board to congratulate us on our safe arrival. The major got a boat and took his things to the colonel's house on the other side of the river. We were given a house belonging to one of the merchants here. It is comfortable, but very hot. There is a monastery, the monks have a very nice garden, but I am sure I do not know what they do out here. The bazaars are filthy, but there are one or two good stores, generally Greek, where you can get very nearly everything you want, but of course things are very expensive. It is a curious fact, you will always find Greeks to be the first in a place for business purposes. We left Kemp* and Anson* behind on one of the other steamers, waiting to tow the boats up when they had passed the Cataracts. At about 7 o'clock in the evening they arrived here with one of the boats. Anson is a very good fellow, and we have been great friends.

"Friday, 29th.—Gordon arrived here last Monday, but he is so busy that one is not able to ask him any questions. He is awfully bothered about the delays, the boats not arriving, &c. All that Gordon is thinking of is to get us off. I know he is on bad terms with the Governor-General, and they are keeping up a little skirmish. Gordon lives on one side of the river, and the Governor the other. All our plans have been altered. Gessi† and Anson started yesterday in the Saffia for the Bahr-el-Gazal; they take 22 soldiers, with Remingtons and 2,000 rounds of cartridges, and wait there until Gordon comes up; they are to try and make friends with the people, and make little excursions into the country. Kemp and I take provisions for three months, and start on board the Bandeen for Gondokoro, and to remain there until Gordon arrives. He wants to separate us, and leave us to our own devices, as much as possible. We have all been very busy the last week getting provisions, &c., and making ready for a start. Anson and Gessi, steamer Saffia, for Bahr-el-Gazal; Kemp and Russell, steamer Bandeen, for Gondokoro (we shall have 200 soldiers); Major Campbell* and Witt*, steamer Khedive, Gondokoro. Colonel Gordon and Linant‡ follow. The Colonel is a peculiar man to understand, but is very energetic, and I am certain will do a lot of good up here. The slave-trade flourishes, and the Governor-General is mixed up in it, I believe. Gordon has not seen him this time at all. When first he arrived he was well received, and the band used to play 'God Save the Queen' all day long, but now there is not a sound, I expect the Governor will find himself in the wrong box, if he does not take care."

BRAVERY AT EL TEB.

Col. Tuson, commanding Royal Marines in the Soudan, has furnished a list of the officers and men who distinguished themselves at El Teb. He says, "I have the honour to name the following:—Lieut. Frederick White (Plymouth Division), Serjt.-Major J. Hirst, Ptes. J. H. Birtwistle and F. Yerbury, and Gunner W. G. Rolf. Lieut. White was personally ordered by the Major-Gen. Commanding to charge the left redoubt of the enemy's position at Teb with his company. He rushed to the front, when two of the enemy sprang upon him, one on each side. He cut one man down twice with his sword, when Pte. Birtwistle rushed to his assistance, and forced his bayonet right through the black, breaking it short off. Birtwistle then clubbed his musket and brained him. The other black was stopped in his attack on Lieut. White by Pte. F. Yerbury, who caught the man by the hair of his head, spinning him round and round so that he could not use his assegai, when Serjt.-Major Hirst rushed to the front and despatched him. These four were also in a dangerous position in front of the attack at the time, as the fire from the side of the square was still continued on each side of them. Gunner W. G. Rolf had a hand-to-hand encounter with one of the enemy, parrying various blows made at him, and eventually despatching his assailant. I should like also to bring to your notice the conduct of Majors Colwell and Allen, and Capt. and Adjt. Poe. The latter officer, although wounded in the leg, still continued to perform his duty, and even in the front assisted Lieut. White when he was attacked. Major Allen was hit in the shin with a case-shot, but still went on with the battalion. Staff. Surg. Martin, R.N., I particularly noticed attending to the wounded in the front." Lieut. Frederick White gained his commission from the Royal Naval School in Feb., 1879, and is the son of Major George White, late qrmr. of the Chatham Division. Major White is to be congratulated on the early success of his sons, who are following in the footsteps of their father, the eldest having been through the Afghan War with his regiment, the 59th. Major White himself was through the Eastern Campaign of 1854-55, including the battle of Balaklava and the siege of Sebastopol. He received a medal with two clasps, the Sardinian and Turkish medals, and medal for meritorious conduct, subsequently receiving his commission in Sept., 1863.

THE SERVICES IN PARLIAMENT.

In the House of Commons on Thursday, Mr. Rylands and Mr. Cavendish Bentinck asked questions with reference to the Wellington statue. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre said in reply that the Government had assented to a proposal by the Prince of Wales for the removal of the Wellington statue to Aldershot, and the erection of a new statue in its place. Since them the Committee had made a full report, which substantially carried out the arrangement originally made. The Government, therefore, would submit a vote of £2,000, as an instalment of the sum of £6,000 promised towards the cost of the new statue. Mr. Boehm had been selected by the Committee as the sculptor, and the Government had approved the choice.

GENERAL GORDON.—Mr. Gladstone gave explanations respecting the position of Gen. Gordon at Khartoum, and said that although the gallant officer was not compelled to stay in the Soudan, the time had not come for ordering him to withdraw, especially as he reported himself and the city to be safe. The Marquis of Hartington, in a long statement in reply to Sir S. Northcote, announced that it was intended to garrison Suakim with Egyptian troops, but that, for the present, some British soldiers and Marines would be retained there. Efforts were being made by means of negotiations with the tribes to open the road to Berber. Gordon had never suggested the employment of British troops for the relief of Khartoum. Sir S. Northcote moved the adjournment of the House in order to discuss these answers, which, he contended, did not sufficiently explain the Government policy in regard to Egypt. Mr. Gladstone declined to give any further particulars, and bitterly complained of the course pursued by the Opposition in continually raising debates upon so delicate a question. Mr. Chaplin, Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett, Mr. Macfarlane, and Lord John Manners having spoken, the motion for adjournment was withdrawn.

PENINSULAR VETERANS.

Thursday, April 10, is the seventieth anniversary of the memorable battle of Toulouse, the closing scene of the Peninsular War. The surviving officers of the British Army engaged in that war are reduced to 11 in number, though it is possible and probable that some few others linger on in private life, but their names cannot easily be traced. Those whose names are still retained in the official Army List for January, 1884, are as follows, viz.:—1. Gen. George Whichcote, who, as a lieut. in the 52nd Light Infantry, wears a medal and nine clasps for Cuidad Rodrigo, Badajoz, Salamanca, Vittoria, Pyrenees, Nivelle, Nive, Orthes, and Toulouse, and was present at Waterloo. 2. Gen. P. V. England, R.A., was present at Vittoria and St. Sebastian (two clasps). 3. Chaplain-Gen. G. R. Gleig, as a lieut. in the 85th Light Infantry, has three clasps for St. Sebastian, Nivelle, and Nive, and also served in the American War of 1814-15. 4. Major J. Q. Pardy was at Toulouse, in the Royal Staff Corps (one clasp). 5. Lieut. F. Bayly was a subaltern of Artillery at Busaco (one clasp), also at Castalla. 6. Lieut. R. Blake Humfrey has two clasps for Nivelle and Nive. It is not known in what corps he served. 7. Comy.-Gen. J. W. Wybalt, and Lieut. (8) A. Gardner, 27th Regt., served in the Peninsula, but have no clasps. Besides the eight above-named officers, there are known to be living:—The Earl of Stradbroke, who, as the Hon. J. Rous, lieut., Coldstream Guards, wears a medal and four clasps for Salamanca, Vittoria, Nivelle, and Nive; also Lieut.-Col. S. L. Stratton, who, as a young ensign in the 68th Light Infantry, was shot through the body at Vittoria; and lastly, Major John Eden (still a member of the United Service Club), who, as Mr. Methold, of the 71st, obtained five clasps for Vittoria, Pyrenees, Nive, Orthes, and Toulouse. Three survivors of Toulouse.

ARMY AND NAVY NOTES.—EGYPT.

Major Macdonnell, R.A., returned to Cairo from leave on March 14.

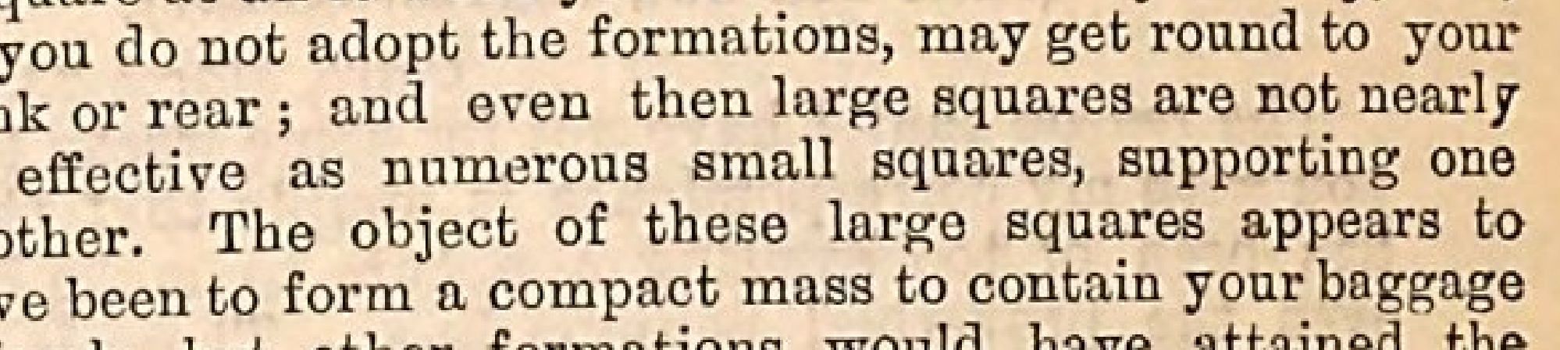
Major Prevost, D.A.C.G., has left Cairo for Assiout, to take over the Commissariat charge of the British troops.

Lieut. Fortescue, A.D.C., has been granted leave of absence to England on very urgent private affairs, to April 17.

The Rev. J. Milne and the Rev. C. A. Rosser left Cairo on March 25 for Suez.

THE SOUDAN SQUARES.

"T.R.S." writes to us:—"I shall be glad if you will accept my views, cut down to the shortest limit, on the recent battles in the Soudan. It seems to me that the general imbecility of Government must have proved an infectious disease, and have been taken in an aggravated form by our military leaders, or they would never have adopted gigantic squares as their order of battle, the most cumbrous, unmanageable formations that could be conceived. The only excuse for a square at all is when you are threatened by cavalry, who, if you do not adopt the formations, may get round to your flank or rear; and even then large squares are not nearly as effective as numerous small squares, supporting one another. The object of these large squares appears to have been to form a compact mass to contain your baggage animals, but other formations would have attained the same object, and been twenty times more manageable and elastic; and regarding our moves to such short distances, even this excuse for the great-square formation falls to the ground, little baggage being required to accompany the army, in fact nothing but spare ammunition mules. The real formation for this desert warfare, modified, of course, by difficulties of ground, would undoubtedly, to my mind, be an advance in échelon from the centre, a reserve and the cavalry at each flank of the rear companies (after having done their work to the front and flanks, which ought to have been done sufficiently, in any but mountainous ground, to indicate the points from which the enemy would attack). A plan will perhaps indicate my exact meaning better than writing about it, especially as mine is not the pen of a ready writer.



* Double Companies.

If the attack is to the front, as is supposable from the direction of the march, continuous support is arriving, and you are using your men, instead of leaving three-parts of them looking right or left, or to the rear, and doubly liable to a panic. If an attack developed (say to the left), a left wheel of the double companies on the left on their own ground gives a good front to the new attack, the leading companies on the right marching to their front, and when they got their distance, wheeling to the left. The reserve would march to the left, to lengthen the line on the new face, and the rear companies on the right would form the new reserve, the cavalry conforming to the fresh front. I have said nothing about the guns or the cavalry, as my only wish was to show what much better formations than great squares could be used for all the purposes supposed to be achieved by them, and what a much handier force. I have served under Sir Charles Napier and seen sundry battles of sorts, so that I do not speak of what I know nothing. From all I have read, I believe the Arabs in the Soudan to be exceptionally brave and dashing in their attacks, but the more I acknowledge the serious nature of the attack, so much the more do I think the great-square formation to be the worst possible formation for meeting it."

"Loyalty" writes:—"Are we a loyal people, and do we love the Sovereign? Down in these parts, scarcely a hundred persons have put on mourning in memory of H.R.H. the late Duke of Albany. I also notice, with surprise and regret, that even ex-Military men treat with contempt, or apathy, her Majesty's commands to wear mourning. Certainly my lines are at present cast in a Radical stronghold."

The Wild Tribes of the Soudan. By F. L. James. (John Murray.)

We turned with much interest to the perusal of this handsome volume, which is exceedingly well illustrated, principally from photographs taken by the author upon the spot; but not having noted the expansion of the title in the words—"an account of travel and sport chiefly in the Basé country, being personal experiences and adventures during three winters spent in the Soudan"—we were very much disappointed in the expectations we had formed from the title, that we would be introduced to the tribes, whose proceedings have rendered them so interesting to us recently, either upon the coast of the Red Sea, about Suakim, or in the interior, near Khartoum. But if, on that head, we had some ground for regretting that we had resorted to the volume, and in the hope of special information ad rem had only to record failure, we must admit that for the sportsman there is abundance of matter; for the naturalist, many interesting observations; and for the general reader descriptions of people, and regions limited perhaps in extent in relation to the whole of the Soudan, but lifelike and accurate; and narratives of personal adventure with wild beasts, of failure and of success, justifying the appearance of the book, if not its title, and rendering it a very valuable guide to those who intend, undeterred by the author's experience, to repeat the experiment of a sporting tour in that part of the world which he visited. Unless the sun and the photographic plate have done them great injustice, a more villainous and uninteresting-looking people than the Basé can scarcely be found on God's earth. But judged by their doings, they are less objectionable in their way than the villainous Abyssinians, whose principal work seems to be plunder and murder. Mr. James, however, considers Abyssinia should have Massowah, as they ought to have a port; but if the description of the people and their doings be true, the more completely they are bottled up and shut out from the rest of the world, the better. It is very interesting to read of the various settlements, such as those at Sanheit and elsewhere, where missionaries, monks, and sisters have, under the protection of the much-abused Egyptian Government, established seminaries and introduced civilisation, spreading the knowledge of arts and manufactures amongst the people. One cannot but regret, when he reads of telegraphs being sent from place to place in this wild country, and of post-offices established, and some form of Government existing, that all this should be abandoned, and handed back to the wild tribes whose hand is not only against every stranger's life when there is no government established amongst them, but who are engaged in the perpetual robbery and murder of their neighbours. We recommend this book to any sportsmen who desire to know what they may expect, and blessed will they be if they expect little, for they shall not be disappointed. We should have liked some information as to the cost of travelling, for the use of our friends. Mr. James and his friends appear to have had the Bank of England at their back, and to have travelled magnâ comitante catervâ of camels and followers, giving largesse freely as they went,—a dromedary here and a flock there, and rather spoiling, we should think, the road for less wealthy sportsmen. The book is dedicated to the memory of the Hon. J. C. Maxwell, and perhaps it is not hypercriticism to say that the words, "This record of our wanderings is affectionately inscribed, R.I.P.," are scarcely appropriate to even the most honoured memory of a departed companion.

Khedives and Pashas. (Sampson Low, Marston, and Co.)

This is a smart book, written by a smart man, who knows a good deal about most of the people whose names have become familiar to us through the machinations of the bondholder, the mistakes of Government, and the marches of victorious or defeated Generals. We should say that smartness rather than true critical acumen characterises the greater part of the remarks of the lively writer, who certainly has connaissance des choses. Many of the anecdotes are familiar, but not on that account more truthful; and we are reminded in reading some of the pages a good deal of the introduction to "Achmet the Fellah," where the conversation on board a steamer bound from Marseilles to Alexandria scarcely exaggerates the tendency to eccentric departures from the truth and the wild flights of imagination which characterise the people who become Levantines by residence in Egypt. The author, who may be guessed at with some certainty by those who are acquainted with Egypt, in speaking of Ismail Pasha, asserts, what we believe there is no evidence to substantiate, that Ismail murdered, not with his own hand, indeed, but by those of his direct servants, Sadyk the Monfettish, a crime so foul as to completely alienate from the ex-Khedive the sympathy or support of any honest man, could it be proved to be his work. The writer tells us that the sketches were originally written as memoranda to amuse a friend, and it is perhaps to be regretted that he should have extended the area, without taking pains in regard to taste in dealing with some of the persons introduced in his book. It is a matter of opinion, of course, but we think that the estimate of Colonel Stanton, and of his influence, is erroneous and unfair. But if the author is severe upon Mr. Vivian, and, justly or unjustly, contemptuous in regard to Sir Rivers Wilson, there can be no doubt, we think, that those who are well acquainted with Sir Edward Malet will hesitate to receive his description of the last Minister and Consul-General but one as very trustworthy. We do not think the author has been quite successful in catching some of the finer points of the characters of Ries Pasha and Nubar Pasha, not to speak of others. Many of the little sayings of the various characters which are quoted in the book and some of the scenes are known. This book can be recommended, however, with great confidence to those who would like lifelike portraits of the remarkable persons whose names have been rendered familiar to the public. There is no explanation given of the extraordinary animosity which characterises Nubar Pasha's references to the late Khedive, and we think that the understanding of the causes of that apparently unaccountable hatred would not be quite alien from a true intelligence of the various important matters connected with Egyptian policy. It is said that one morning, as Nubar was dilating to Lord Dufferin, at Cairo, with great vehemence upon the many wicked extravagances of the Khedive, his lordship, putting his glass in his eye, said, carelessly, "How very shocking! By-the-by, who was Minister during the time this scandalous recklessness was going on?" If the writer has plenty of acid for his salad, he also has got oil, and he distributes a full measure of butter to those he likes, who, it must be admitted, generally deserve it. He affects, however, in the main, the style in which About described Cardinal Antonelli, in "La Question Romaine."

On Guard. (Gale and Polden, Chatham.)—A useful little handbook for officers, entitled, On Guard: What to Do, and How to Do It, the very thing that young and inexperienced officers stand in need of, arranged by Capt. M. Quayle-Jones, 1st Batn. 6th Royal Warwickshire Regt., has been forwarded to us for notice. A more concise and better guide could not have been compiled. Every officer will remember the fear and tremor in which he stood when the startling cry of "Guard, turn out!" first broke upon his ears, and will, although smiling at the recollection, reflect to himself that the instructions contained in the Queen's Regulations and on the board of orders of the guard-room were not altogether of an explicit and satisfactory nature. Capt. Quayle-Jones has remedied this defect.

The twentieth number (Vol. II.), of the Kennel Review really deserves a favourable word, and would be much appreciated by man's best friend and servant if it could be translated into dog-English, or Latin, or any other dog tongue; albeit, there is a table of contents therein. But Everett Millais gives a charming paper on the Basset, and an artist with a true eye for dog-beauty has a fine portrait of "Turk," the champion St. Bernard, and there is a lovely "Gladys," and much dog-lore, and news all very pleasant and well done for sixpence.

Messrs. Halford, of 169 Oxford Street, have published twelve representative plates, drawn on stone by Mr. R. Simkin, and coloured by hand, to illustrate the uniforms of the British Army as they are to-day, which, apart from their merits, may be interesting in a few years to come, when the uniforms and the Army have undergone another change or two. It is a curious example of the influence of the "picturesque" and of the tailor on the Horse Guards' mind, to note the varied "uglinesses" which have been inflicted upon our soldiers as uniform; but if one compares the dress of to-day with that of 50 years ago, as it is represented in prints of the period, he will admit that the helmet is a decided gain, but that in most other adjuncts there has been no improvement. Fifty years before that, again, the British Army was very handsomely, if unpractically, dressed; but there was no nonsense then about "invisible colours," and "loose order," and "long-range fire," and the object of our forefathers seems to have been to make the soldiers as conspicuous and pretty as possible. In these 12 plates, well drawn and accurately coloured, there are some omissions. There are no Commissariat officers,—and who are more gallant to behold? No Army Medical Department, no chaplains, no Pay Department, and no Light Dragoons; but there are "Highlanders," of course, and "Scottish Infantrymen," and "Scottish Riflemen"—whatever the latter two may be. It is altogether a handsome series, in a neat cover, very suitable for a present, and likely to be useful, as we have said, to the "grose" to come.

The late lamented Duke of Albany, shortly before his departure abroad, directed Mr. Collins to thank Captain de Carteret Bisson in the name of the Duke and Duchess very cordially, for the copies of the educational works Capt. Bisson had sent for their Royal Highnesses' acceptance.

A correspondent writes:—"It is high time that something should be arrived at in the matter of soldiers smoking in public. Under certain restrictions, they should be allowed to indulge in the use of tobacco when walking out. This afternoon I saw a corporal of the Royal Artillery from Shorncliffe smoking a large meerschaum pipe upon the Lees,—the fashionable promenade of Folkestone. The line should be drawn somewhere."

We observe the Perim Coal Company have procured the services of Retired Com. Mountjoy Squire, R.N., who was for many years at Ascension.

A pattern white-cap cover for seamen's caps has been sealed, and one has been supplied to each ship of the First Reserve and Channel Squadron as pattern.

MUSKETRY REGULATIONS.

"D'Estampes" writes as follows:—"Men who have carefully studied rifle shooting as illustrated by soldiers cannot fail to have observed how very little good the recent changes have produced. The standard has been raised (?) by making it harder for a soldier to become a 'marksman.' He has to qualify by making a certain number of hits on a 'figure target.' This may be practice for a good shot, but for a bad, or even for an indifferent shot, it is utterly useless. There are men—and ten at least might be picked out of most regiments—who would never touch the figure at all, and many more who only do so by chance; and they might fire 10,000 shots at it, and not be one whit the better after the last than they were before the first. I have studied rifle shooting for a long time, and have minutely watched thousands of shots fired by common soldiers, and from my observations have drawn certain conclusions, which I propose to set before you; and if other practical men who take an interest in the subject will also give the result of their experience, a good practical system may be obtained to suit the present times, weapons, and, most of all, the men who have to use the weapons. I think every one will agree with me that in these days a third-class or bad shot is worse than useless, is an encumbrance to the Army, and I would propose to get rid of him by transferring him to a non-combatant branch of the service, if he is a good character, and if a bad character, by discharging him. Now, the question arises, how is it that some men are such bad shots? My opinion is that, in the majority of cases, the fault lies in the training of the soldier when a recruit at musketry; he has been allowed to contract some bad habit in shooting, which it is afterwards impossible to break him of. This shows the importance of exceedingly careful training, and yet the very man who was supposed to do this, the Instructor of Musketry, has been done away with. Now a company, with maybe a certain number of recruits attached, undergoes its training under the supervision of, say, a subaltern, who, being a bad shot himself, understands nothing about the art of good shooting, and also, perhaps, hates musketry; he contents himself, therefore, by keeping a register, ordering the fire and cease fire, and saying occasionally to a man who misses, no matter what the reason of the miss may be, aim higher or lower, &c. Is this proper training for men on whose shooting our existence as a nation depends? No, the musketry instructor should be re-established, but should be more carefully chosen than formerly. He must, of course, be a good shot himself, and his capability for making a recruit or bad shot hit—that is, making a good shot of him—be tested before appointment; he is not simply to conduct the course, and act more or less as umpire, but must be a teacher and trainer. There are many men who, when they see a soldier shoot and miss, cannot tell you the reason of his missing; others there are who will see the cause at once, and tell you almost every time whether the bullet will hit its mark as soon as the shot is fired, and they will very often be able to make the man hit by pointing out to him where the fault lies, and breaking him of it. In the next place, if the instructor is a bad shot himself, the men will not listen to him; they argue he cannot hit himself, and therefore, how can he make me hit (false reasoning in some cases, I admit). In the next place, many soldiers will take greater pains, if by doing so some material advantage is likely to accrue to them. Therefore, and also on account of another reason, which I will mention presently, I would divide the men into five classes, viz., Marksmen, 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th-class shots; each man would receive a prize, to vary according to the class to which he belongs. The rate of a man's daily pay might also be made to depend upon the class to which he belongs. Thus many men who now, knowing they have no chance of being marksmen, do not care how they shoot, would take an interest in the work. The second reason why I would divide the men into classes, would be to allow a suitable weapon to be given to each man. Now, marksmen, or rather, men who are confirmed marksmen, say, who have been marksmen for two years running, I would arm with a weapon superior to the Martini-Henry, both as regards sights and trajectory; to the 1st and 2nd classes, I propose to give the Martini-Henry; the 3rd and 4th classes, being composed of men who are of very little use when firing at ranges over 400 or 500 yards, and who only help to waste the ammunition, I propose to arm with a rapid-firing or repeating rifle, having a very flat trajectory up to 500 yards, but not very effective beyond that range. In this way, when the enemy was advancing, the marksmen would first come into play, the others remaining under cover, and therefore safe, until the firing line came to within 800 yards; as soon as the enemy came within 500 yards, and his fighting line was becoming thicker (from the reinforcements which would have to be thrown into it as it approached), it would then be possible to pour a tremendous fire into him—the repeating rifle coming from under cover—and an effective one, on account of the flat trajectory of the bullets, which would also render the manipulation of the sights less important, and the men would be cool, because they would be comparatively fresh, from being under cover. It may be urged that all the men should come into play at the long ranges, because the number of bullets would demoralise the enemy, but I think with a bad shot, as he will never hit the particular man he aimed at, the bullets from the repeating rifle would be just as likely to hit at long ranges as those from the present Martini-Henry, and as the casualties of the enemy in that case would be only in a certain proportion to the number of shots fired, the repeating rifle would be more effective, because it would fire a greater number of shots. Now, let us consider how this plan would act on the offensive. In this case, the bad shots cannot be kept under cover at long ranges, and it will be justly urged that unless a man fires as he advances he will be demoralised, as he hears the whizzing of the enemy's bullets so distinctly, whereas, when he is himself firing, he does not notice this; but as I have shown above, with the bad shot who hits accidentally, the damage done bears a certain proportion to the number of shots fired, therefore the repeating rifle would also, in this case, be at least equally good as the other. I would propose, however, as far as it may be possible, that the men armed with Martini-Henrys and repeating rifles should advance firing, covered by the accurate fire of the marksmen's rifles. When the Martini-Henry came within really effective range, they would then halt, as much under cover as possible, keeping up a steady fire; the repeating rifles would continue to advance (firing) to within 400 yards, and at the same time the marksmen would advance, also firing, to join the Martini-Henry, the two together advancing, covered by the fire of the repeaters at 400 yards. This plan would, I am aware, not always be possible; but, in some cases, it would. I think that there can be little doubt that it would be effective; when within 400 yards, the fire would, of course, be very destructive, the repeater then beginning to assert itself. There is also a point I would call attention to regarding the marksmen's rifles; in many cases, they might harass the enemy very considerably at long ranges, themselves almost safe, lying perdu behind some bushes, mounds &c.; they would be invaluable to annoy the enemy's guns, as was shown by an incident in point in the late Boer War. The best way to make a man a good shot is by making him perfectly familiar with his rifle, as familiar as he is with his knife and fork, and that is best done by casual shooting all the year round. I would, therefore, provide all barracks with a range, just as a school is provided with a cricket-ground, at least 200 yards long, and that a man can shoot on in any spare moments and in any old fatigue dress which he may happen to have on. The system I would establish would be pool targets, a separate pool being allotted to the men of each class, the whole to be in the charge of a well-qualified serjeant. I would also let men shoot for bets, and have matches amongst themselves on the range; in this way men would loaf in at any time of the day and shoot, and I am very sure that after this system had been in vogue for a year or two, that the shooting of the Army would have improved wonderfully. I would also offer extra inducements to men to become marksmen, by giving them a very noticeable, distinguishing badge, such as a white-leather cross-belt; and when the regiment marched out, they should march at the head (as the Grenadiers did of old), under command of the Musketry Instructor. These, as I said before, are the conclusions I have come to; and I hope, now that I have started the ball, other abler men will keep it rolling, until we get a good, practical, and thorough system."

Obituary.

Col. C. V. Conway-Gordon, whose death at Bombay on March 6, 1884, has lately been announced, entered the service as ensign in the 47th Regt. in Jan. 1855, and obtaining his lieutenancy in the corps in May, 1855, served with it in the Crimea in the winter of that year. He was promoted to his captaincy in Aug. 1860, exchanging to the 79th Highlanders in Aug. 1862, with which regiment he served in India, being in the North-West Frontier Campaign of 1863-64, affair with Momunds, Shubkubbu and Michni forts. Joined the Bengal S.C. in Jan. 1867; present at the affairs against Bezotis in 1868. Served as brigade-major on the Bengal Establishment, then as assist.-adjt.-gen. of the Hyderabad Contingent, and on vacating that appointment was given the command of the 2nd Infantry of that Force on May 10, 1878, a command he held at the time of his decease. His later commissions date—brevet major, March, 1870; brevet lieut.-col., Oct. 1877; col., Oct. 1881. He was well known as a good, all-round sportsman, being a straight rider to hounds, a first-class shot, a very fair cricketer, and an excellent boxer. Charlie Gordon's name was one well known and beloved in the service, to which he was devotedly attached. The family has "done the State some service." There were five sons of this generation. The eldest died in 1858, senior captain of the 91st Highlanders, at the close of the Kaffir war. The second, a captain of the 104th Regt. (Fusiliers), had to retire from ill-health consequent upon exposure in India. The third was the officer whose services have been recorded above. The fourth, an officer in the Navy, died in the Crimea in 1854, and the fifth is the officer who has been sent home to give evidence before the Committee of the House of Commons on Indian Railways. The second whom we have named has three sons in the services, one of whom is the young officer whose case has excited so much interest, and whose treatment by the Admiralty has not been favourably received by many of the Admiralty's best supporters.

A deputation, consisting of all the leading inhabitants and merchants of Suakim, waited upon Admiral Hewett on Tuesday, and publicly thanked him, before his departure for Abyssinia, for the prevalence of peace and justice enjoyed by the inhabitants during his rule at this port. The deputation further prayed that the whole of the troops should not be withdrawn. It was urged that Osman Digna would claim credit for our retreat as the result of his prayers, and that the tribesmen would again assemble. The Admiral replied that two or three hundred English soldiers, together with one ship-of-war, would remain at Suakim, and that in future the Governor would always be English, so as to insure the inhabitants against oppression.

Our American friends have frequently complained that their pilgrimages to Stratford-upon-Avon are impeded by imperfect railway connections, and a glance at any good map will show that there is certainly at present no good ground for the objection; but the Midland Junction Railway places Stratford-upon-Avon in direct communication with the great lines of England, viâ Towcester; and the directors now come forward with a proposal to raise £160,000 of 5 per cent., perpetual rent-charge, interest guaranteed and shares granted in perpetuity by a charge of £8,000 a year on the net receipts of the East and West Junction Railway, in 16,000 shares of £10 each. Particulars are set forth in the advertisement, which will be found in this week's number.

THE ACCOUNTANT BRANCH.

The statement placed in the hands of Members of Parliament has, we understand, induced several of them to take up the case of the Accountant Officers of the Navy. As there is no fixed age for the compulsory retirement of assistant-paymasters, their promotion is (with life, health, and proper conduct) a certainty, sooner or later. Their promotion is, however, by seniority, depending upon deaths and retirements of the one grade above (a few promotions are made for war services).

The only remedy, it is insisted, which would compensate the 100 junior paymasters and the assistant-paymasters (whose grievances and interests are inseparable) for their long and increasing detention in the junior rank is some modification of the present rule for counting such "junior service," and a feeling exists among these officers that some later portion of such service should, on promotion, be allowed to reckon as "senior service," on the principle that the pay of paymasters, during their first 11 years' service, should bear some proportion to the length of their service as assistant-paymasters; this would slightly increase the rates of pay of some of the junior paymasters, but the highest rate of pay would not be reached one day earlier than at present by any such alteration of the present scale that could be suggested. If service over a certain seniority as assistant-paymaster were allowed to count as senior service, a great concession would be made to the Department, and they would have no material grievance remaining; but, until then, they continue victims to the scheme of 1870, the abortiveness of which as regarded the juniors was indicated by subsequent Orders in Council, the last of which added 6d. a day full pay annually to assistant-paymasters after 9 years' seniority, until 12 years' service was reached, when it stopped.

London Amusements.

The event which has been so deeply deplored by classes of the community has naturally cast a shadow our places of public amusement, and the West-E theatres have exhibited during the week a considerab diminished attendance.

At COVENT GARDEN, Signor Salvini has now closed engagement. On Monday night he gave his final perfor ance of "Othello," on Wednesday of "The Gladiator," a with Thursday evening was associated his benefit, and embodiment of "Hamlet" repeated this evening (Saturday

At the PRINCE'S THEATRE has been produced Mr. C. Hawtrey's version of Von Moser's German comedy "Der Bibliothekar," which might have been written aft reading the plot, at least, of Mr. Dion Boucicault "London Assurance," so similar are some of the incident The adaptation, bearing the title of "The Private Secr tary," is only an elaborate four-act farce, capable of co siderable compression and susceptible of improvement various respects. The first act, where an impudent youn fellow visits the house of a fox-hunting squire to avo his creditors, goes off briskly enough, and the audaci with which he passes himself off as the youthful cleric gentleman engaged to fill the position of private secretar furnishes some amusement. After this, the scenes a without motive, and the action is a mere succession practical jokes. An excellent cast was provided, but the was little scope for the talents of those engaged in t representation. Mr. Beerbohm Tree gives a clever po traiture of a young curate continually mistaken for som body else, and Mr. W. J. Hill is vigorously funny as Anglo-Indian with an excessively irascible temperame All the other personages are only shadows, and the ener displayed by Mrs. Leigh Murray, Mrs. Stephens, Miss Lu Buckstone, and Miss Tilbury, with the assiduous efforts Mr. H. C. Carton, Mr. Anson, and Messrs. Beaumont a Reeves Smith, could not succeed in securing an undisput verdict of approval.

With this week has terminated Miss Mary Anderso very successful season at the LYCEUM, which will now occupied for a short time by Mr. Lawrence Barrett, t American actor, who fills up the interval until Mr. Hen Irving's reappearance.

Mr. H. W. Williamson, the author of the comedy call "Retiring," and Mr. Samuel Hayes, well known in theat cal circles, occupied the Gaiety Theatre on Tuesday a Wednesday afternoons with their respective morning p formances. The annual benefit in aid of the Royal Gene Theatrical Fund took place at Drury Lane Theatre Thursday. A very attractive programme was provided the occasion.

The Easter holidays will be this year marked by ma changes of programme. Her Majesty's Theatre will reopened at cheap prices with "The Ticket-of-Leave Ma The Carl Rosa opera season will be commenced at Dr Lane on Easter Monday. The Gaiety will produce Monday next Mr. Robert Reece's new version of the Fre three-act burlesque opera of "La Belle Hélène," w Offenbach's music, mingled with modern compositions.

On Thursday next will be produced at the Olympic Bartley Campbell's American play called "My Partne for which Mr. George Rignold has been specially engag The Alhambra brings out the comic opera of "The Begg Student" on Saturday next. Miss Kate Santley reop the Royalty with an English version, by Mr. Sydney Grun of Hervé's comic opera, "La Cosaque."

At the Globe will be brought out "Dick," a comic ope founded on the old Whittington legend. The Criterion announced to open at Easter, on the return of Mr. Charl Wyndham and his company from America. The Surr furnishes a new drama by Messrs. Paul Meritt and Geor Conquest, called, "The King of Diamonds," illustrati scenes in South Africa. At Mr. and Mrs. German Ree Entertainment, Mr. Corney Grain will introduce his n musical sketch, called "A Little Dinner." At the Oxfo the London Pavilion, the Canterbury, and the chief Lond music halls extra attractions are promised.

Mr. Samuel Brandram gave his final recital at Willi Rooms on Tuesday afternoon, declaiming for the first ti in London the "Cricket on the Hearth." Mr. Brandra now proceeds on a tour through the United States.

Playgoers have to regret the decease of Mrs. Wybr Robertson, professionally known as Miss Litton, who expir early on Tuesday morning at her residence, 6 Alfred Plac Thurlow Square, S.W. Her first appearance on the Lond stage was as Effie Deans, at the Princess's, in March, 18 For the last dozen years Miss Litton was a prominent actre at the Gaiety, Haymarket, Drury Lane, Court, Imperial, a other theatres. Her impersonation of Rosalind in "A You Like It" was a striking proof of her histrionic abilit Her age was only thirty-seven.

The Times announces that "Lieut.-Col. W. C. F. Moly neux, brigade-major, 22nd Regt.; Capt. Turnbull, 32n L.I.; Capt. A. Pollock, 21st Fusiliers; and Lieut. F. MR. POWER'S despatches to the Times from Khartoum are exceedingly interesting. They may be regarded as an authentic account of the situation from day to day, whilst General Gordon's briefer telegrams to Sir Evelyn Baring represent his own impressions of the state of things and his views of the situation from time to time. The correspondent in detail gives lively pictures of the practice of Krupp guns on the so-called rebels, of the cowardice of Bashi-Bazouks, and of the general skirmishing, apparently on both sides of the river, opposite Khartoum. And if we are to judge from his accounts of the actual military situation there, should General Gordon's ammunition hold out, there need be no great apprehension of any attack of a serious character from the Mahdi's followers, nor of any deficiency of food,—for, wonderful to relate, the markets continue to be well supplied. The small river steamers were being usefully and destructively employed as a flotilla to shell the "rebels" who are in arms for the Mahdi, and who do not appear to have rebelled against the ruler to whom our Legate offered the Sultanate of the country. It is observable that no word of Colonel Stewart in recent despatches has appeared, and we fear that energetic and restless officer, whose health is not always of the strongest, has been obliged to resort to forced inactivity for the time in consequence of his recent exertions, so that Gordon is probably alone in his military responsibilities. It is well for the Government and for the credit of the country that the Major-General has preserved his health under the strain to which he has been subjected. Hope deferred maketh the heart sick, but we cannot believe that General Gordon ever thought it possible that any English troops could be sent to his assistance after March. Weighing the military possibilities of the situation, it would be quite absurd to maintain that no assistance could be afforded to him even at the present moment, because, if money were no object, and political considerations connected with India were laid on one side, a force could be organised to proceed up the Nile, even in the heat of the summer. Certainly the position of the European officers accompanying such an expedition would not be enviable. That banal phrase, "something must be done," means very little, because there is scarcely any fixed idea as to the means by which General Gordon's release could be effected. Meantime, Mr. Clifford Lloyd, like a mad bull in a china shop, is goring Egyptian ministers and functionaries at Cairo, and precipitating the inevitable coming of the other "something that must be done," which varies according to the inspirations of those who counsel it, either protection, or annexation, or complete withdrawal. Supposing the Khedive were provided a suitable pension, and the members of the ex-Khedivial family were placed upon retiring allowances, let us consider what really would be the means by which Egypt would be governed, under the dispensation for which some of the London newspapers are clamouring. The basis of occupation, whether permanent or temporary, must be the Army. For the sake of security the disbandment of the Egyptian force under Sir Evelyn Wood necessarily comes with the absolute assumption of control by the British Government in a tangible form. Sir Evelyn Baring, let us say, would be Governor-General of Egypt. He has somehow or another got hold of Downing Street. But upon whom would Sir E. Baring rely, on whom would any of his ministers rely, for the actual acquaintance with affairs necessary for them to administer Egypt proper? There is not one of the English officers in Cairo who is acquainted with the language of the people. There is an immense gulf placed between our experience of government in Egypt and of government in India! In the latter country, with the exception of temporary chiefs sent out to represent the Queen of England, all the great officials have spent their lives in the country, and each is conversant with the manners and customs of the natives, and, in the majority of cases, with the dialects spoken over the vast regions in which they exercise sway. In Egypt, the English official must resort to the French-speaking Egyptian or to the Coptic clerk, who represents to the Mudir or to the country the power of the Government. As an illustration of the way in which our own agents deal with the people, we may allude to a story which has come to us from Cairo, that Mr. Clifford Lloyd has had recourse to the peculiar means of making the fellaheen pay taxes which were so much reprobated in the time of Ismail and of the early part of the rule of the present Khedive. In face of the discontent of the people, the excitement created by the Mahdi and the religious movement among the tribes, the garrison of annexed or protected Egypt should not be less than 15 battalions, distributed from Assouan to Alexandria, with battalions at the large towns, such as Zagazig, Tantah, Port Said, and at Suez and Ismailia. As any increase of taxation is out of the question, the Budget of the United Kingdom must furnish the sums needed for the payment of the troops, whose abstraction from their ordinary duties at home, in the Colonies, and in India, would occasion either a dangerous diminution of our already attenuated force, or cause a very material increase to the Army Estimates. À quoi bon?

THE Earl of Belmore deserves the thanks of the Lieutenants of the Navy for having so ably and successfully advocated their cause in the House of Lords last Session. His Lordship's advocacy has induced the Admiralty to add to the pay of the Senior Lieutenants, notwithstanding that Lord Northbrook "could hold out no hope" at the time that his colleagues would do so. Indeed, Lord Northbrook summarily disposed of the reports then extant that Lieutenants of over eight years' standing were to receive an increase of pay, for, as his lordship then stated, the supply of Executive officers exceeded the demand, and there was, therefore, no necessity for the Admiralty to offer extra inducements for parents to send their sons to sea. The First Lord of the Admiralty stated distinctly at the time, that, "he had not found any indisposition on the part of fathers to send their sons into the service." This was perfectly true, seeing that there are at all times about three-fold as many candidates as there are vacancies to fill at the Examinations for Naval Cadetships; but it is a great pity that such sentiments should be enunciated in the Legislature. It would have been more graceful to have simply stated that the Admiralty could not afford to increase the pay of Naval Lieutenants, as then, when their Lordships decided to increase that pay, the boon would have been received with thankfulness. But it is characteristic of the Admiralty never to initiate a reform, and never to adopt one, except under pressure and after strenuously opposing it. At first, the Admiralty adopt the supply-and-demand theory of political economy. They as good as say, "What do we care about the Lieutenants: we can get more of them than we want?" They then reconsider the question, and after having flatly refused to grant Lord Belmore's request, proceed to carry out his suggestion, and increase the pay of the Senior Lieutenants. Their Lordships also declined last year to better the position of the Warrant and Petty Officers of the Navy, but have, nevertheless, done so this Session. Surely to act in this manner is a mistake? It has long been evident that something would soon have to be done for the Lieutenants, Warrant, and Petty Officers of the Navy, but when the cause of these grades was advocated in Parliament, the Admiralty resented the attempt then made to induce them to better the position of those on whom the efficiency of the service mainly depends, and all sorts of excuses were made. This showed the service the light in which it is regarded by its rulers, whose subsequent surrender and concession of a part of the reforms craved, can only prove to every officer and man in the Navy that expediency, and not the public good, is the motive-power at the Admiralty. There it is considered that what was good enough for their Lordships in their younger days, is amply sufficient for those who have succeeded them. And why is it expedient to concede now that which had been refused last year? Surely, it is unnecessary for us to explain that the agitation on behalf of the Warrant and Petty Officers, followed by the case of the Lieutenants being taken up so ably by Lord Belmore, gave the Admiralty much trouble. Hence, to secure peace, and stay an agitation which was becoming serious, their Lordships have been good enough to grant a great part of that which has been asked of them. But this mode of legislating for the Navy secures for their Lordships neither the respect nor the good-will of the Service. The concessions have fairly been wrung from the Admiralty, and we pride ourselves on that the Army and Navy Gazette played no unimportant part in securing the result. We should have preferred, however, to have been able to thank Lord Northbrook for a spontaneous promise to redress grievances of long standing so soon as they were brought to his notice. Instead, he denied the existence of the wrong, attempted to refute Lord Belmore's arguments, and would hold out no hope of any improvement being made in the pay and position of those serving in the grades named, on the ground that the supply was greater than the demand. Then, having positively declined to admit the necessity for reform—having, in fact, denied that there was anything to complain of—Lord Northbrook sends the Parliamentary Secretary of the Admiralty down to the House of Commons to announce that the pay and position of Lieutenants, Warrant and Petty Officers, will be ameliorated. Had Lord Northbrook held out the slightest hope last year that such a step might be taken by the Admiralty, the Navy would now be full of gratitude for what their Lordships have done. But as matters stand, all concerned believe that had it not been for Lord Belmore and the service Press, no concessions would have been made this year by the Admiralty. The moral of all this is that the Navy will learn to comprehend the truth of the old saying, "The gods help those who help themselves;" or, in other words, that to secure reform, it is necessary to ventilate grievances in no half-hearted manner, both in Parliament and in the columns of the Press. Would it not, therefore, be wiser of the Admiralty to acquiesce at once in the appointment of a Royal Commission to enquire into the administration of the Navy, with a view of discovering all real causes of complaint, and of finding out their remedy? Instead of only granting reforms when literally wrung from them, we should like to see the Admiralty forestall events, by being the first to discover faults of administration, and the first to rectify them. Then the Navy would be made to keep pace with the times.

The Duke of Edinburgh left Athens with the weather division of the Channel Squadron, to rejoin Rear-Admiral Wilson and the lee division at Malta on April 11, and then prepare to return home.

The Admiralty have sent new crews for the Temeraire, Carysfort, Briton, and Ranger out to the Mediterranean and Red Sea, in the Malabar. Their Lordships have still to find reliefs for eleven ships whose crews are anxiously waiting orders to return home.

The Admiralty are determined, it appears, to make the country believe that there is no chance of England being involved in a Naval war for years to come, at the very least, for just when the country is increasing its responsibilities the Admiralty are decreasing the number of ships in commission, and are also curtailing the Naval Estimates. We had 246 ships in commission this time last year, but now we have only 236.

We have repeatedly drawn attention to the excessive cost of the Britannia as a training-ship for Naval cadets, but, so far, nothing has been done to lighten the expense. The estimated cost of maintaining the Britannia during the current financial year is set down at £33,968, and the number of cadets on her books at 128. Each cadet will thus cost the country the enormous sum of £267. Deducting the charge to the parents, each will still cost the taxpayers £205.

We are informed on good authority that the "young lieutenant" who recently resigned his commission to avoid being tried by court-martial is not to be pitied. He had to leave a former ship somewhat hurriedly, and go to hospital, or, had he not done so, most probably his career in the service would then have been cut short. Sobriety in an officer is a sine quâ non. No confidence can be reposed in those who are addicted to drink.

The Admiralty have this year appropriated but £220 towards the expense of granting medals to the officers, seamen, and marines of the Navy, while last year no less a sum than £2,200 was devoted to this purpose.

Distinguished-Service Rewards of £100 per annum have been granted to Major-Generals G. F. Berry and J. Wilkinson, on retirement.

The Admiralty have been much exercised of late by the persistent attempts made in the House of Commons to extract from the Parliamentary Secretary of the Admiralty a promise that the case of the Accountant Branch of the Navy will receive some consideration at the hands of their Lordships. Mr. Campbell-Bannerman fairly lost his temper last week when answering Mr. Healy's question, referred him to the previous answers he had given in the House, and then curtly informed the hon. Member that the Admiralty "did not contemplate taking any steps in view of the temporary nature of the present slackness of promotion in the Accountant Branch." We can only add that we hope the slackness of promotion is "only temporary;" but were we to endorse the Parliamentary statement as a fact, we should very justly be accused of perverting the truth.

The Admiralty have given orders to enclose and dredge a sheet of water within Portsmouth Harbour to be used as a torpedo-ground wherein to conduct experiments on a more elaborate scale than has previously been possible, the risk of losing these costly machines have deterred their Lordships heretofore from sanctioning their free use in unenclosed waters.

Rear-Admiral Lyons has arrived at Callao from his cruise in the South Pacific with his squadron.

Every officer who was directly or indirectly connected with the grounding of the Agincourt on the Pearl Rock, has received marks of favour from the Admiralty, while Staff Commander Kiddle, through the neglect of whose advice the accident occurred, has been retired. According to Admiral Wilmot and Admiral Wellesley, Staff Commander Kiddle saved the Agincourt. The late Admiral the Hon. J. C. Glyn was, at the time, serving on board the Warrior, next astern of the Agincourt, and shortly before his death he wrote to Staff Commander Kiddle as follows:—"Your case has always moved me deeply, for I, who was present at the whole affair, know how shamefully you were treated, and were made to suffer for the gross ignorance and negligence of others. Besides, I remember the splendid manner in which you used to handle the big ships on the North-American Station."

Rear-Admiral Salmon has returned to Simon's Bay from his cruise up the West Coast of Africa.

Commodore Erskine has returned to Sydney from Hobart, Tasmania.

The German corvette Sophie has arrived at Kiel, and the two native chiefs taken prisoners at Little Popo, on the West Coast of Africa, have been landed and interned in the fortress. From their present quarters they have a good view every day of the German garrison at drill, and it is hoped by this means to impress them with a full sense of the warlike power of the Empire.

Mr. E. N. Swainson, Assistant-Secretary of the Admiralty, will visit Devonport at once to make final arrangements for the introduction of a better system for checking officers and men who are absent from their ships on leave extending over twenty-four hours. Such inquisitorial work must be very distasteful to so high-minded an official as Mr. Swainson.

It is rumoured that the Royal Marine Battalion at present at Suakim will for some time to come form the garrison of Port Said.

The rejoicing at the Admiralty over the appointment of Mr. Evan McGregor, C.B., as Permanent Secretary, has been universal, everybody, Naval officers included, having a good word to say for Captain Tryon's successor.

By Circular No. 6 N, dated March 21, 1884, and promulgated this week, their Lordships give notice that it has "been decided that Assistant-Paymasters of eight years' seniority shall be eligible for appointment as Secretaries to Flag Officers and Commodores, 1st Class, not being Commanders-in-Chief; and that such service, as Secretary, shall reckon as full senior service for all purposes." This is the first instalment of justice to these officers, and should have been granted long ago; but it is not creditable to any Board of Admiralty to be forced into a concession of this kind, as we are perfectly aware that had not H.R.H. the Vice-Admiral commanding the Channel Squadron refused point-blank to take any other Secretary than Mr. Rickard, the Circular referred to would never have seen the light. It now remains for something similar to be done for the brother-officers of the Duke of Edinburgh's Secretary, but few of whom can hope to be so fortunate as to be appointed to similar posts; and it is now the time for them to use every effort to have their undoubted grievance placed before the public, as their Lordships appear to be so much under Treasury control, that they are unable to demand the small funds necessary to repair the evils caused by the abuse of patronage by various administrations during the past 20 years, and which now fall upon the heads of the Junior Paymasters and Senior Assistant-Paymasters.

Twenty years ago, officers of the Royal Marines were obtaining their regimental Lieutenant-Colonelcies in from 24 to 25 years. At the present date, the four senior Majors on the List are all in their twenty-ninth year of service, and there is every probability that the junior of the four will exceed 30 years before he receives promotion. The subalterns are, however, more fortunate, as they are now getting their companies in less than ten years service, against eighteen a few years ago.

We are given to understand that there is every probability of the Admiralty selecting Rear-Admiral William Henry Whyte to succeed Rear-Admiral John Crawford Wilson, whose time as Second-in-Command of the Channel Squadron expired on April 10.

Rear-Admiral Sir Anthony H. Hoskins, K.C.B., leaves the Admiralty this day on an extended tour of inspection of the Coastguard stations in Scotland and Ireland. The Admiral Superintendent of Reserves will probably not be back at the Admiralty before the end of May.

The Admiralty have given orders for the Dreadnought to be brought forward for commission without delay, to take the place of the Inflexible in the Mediterranean.

The origin of the term "bumboat" appears to be doubtful with some of our lexicographers. An old edition of Johnson gives "from bum and boat; perhaps to bump." Webster says, "from bum, the buttock, on account of its clumsy form; a clumsy boat used for conveying provisions, fruit, &c., to ships' crews." Others give no derivation, but merely an explanation of its use. A fair derivation would, however, be from "boom," the boat being allowed for the convenience of the ship's company to hang for hours together on the swinging boom, and hence the "boom-boat," corrupted into "bumboat."

The Liverpool Courier suggests that some M.P. should ask for a return of Volunteer Adjutants in this district who have attended upon courts-martial, and the number of days spent thereon. Our contemporary says:—"We cannot speak for other places, but in Liverpool Volunteer corps are very much inconvenienced by losing the services of their adjutants when employed on courts-martial, &c. 'Where's the adjutant?' asks an officer; 'Oh, he has gone to a court-martial in Warrington, sir;' or perhaps it may be at the Cavalry Barracks, the North Fort, or the Isle of Man; or he is called to sit upon a board to condemn some artillery clothing or a cavalry bridle. Volunteers do not drill every day. They have certain specified times when the Adjutant's services are required—battalion drill one night, company drill another, officers' tactics class another, passing Serjeants for certificates another, and so on; and all this routine is, especially of late years, sadly interrupted by the Adjutant being taken from Volunteer for Army duties. What makes the matter worse is that the Adjutant's pay is not charged to the Army, but to the Volunteer Vote, and yet the former has the first right to his services! Out of £562,800 voted for the Volunteers last year, £131,000 was for Adjutants and Serjeant-Instructors' pay." This certainly seems to be a most reasonable complaint, and we trust some Member will take the suggestion.

A correspondent, "R. J. H.," complains because we did not last week chronicle the fact that the old 65th, on arrival home from the Soudan, are to be stationed at Dover instead of Devonport, as had been arranged. Perhaps if our respected correspondent had to perform week by week the task which we are set of trying to fathom the mysteries of our present War-Office administration, and of rendering as intelligible as it is possible to make it the working of an arrangement "which has mashed up" regiments and individuals into a "harmonious (w)hole," he would be more ready to make allowances. We try to do our best, but if we fail we beg our readers, recognising, as they must do, the difficulties against which we have to contend in an age of military topsyturvydom, to be generous. It is the same cry everywhere, "I can only get on by ignoring the new titles entirely, and sticking to the old numbers." And so it is with us. We could follow the old 65th, because the number acted as a sort of military landmark. But directly the 65th becomes transformed into a battalion of a York and Lancaster Regiment, it loses its individuality, and it is almost impossible to watch its movements with the same care and attention that we used to do in the days of old.

Lieutenant L. G. Drummond, Scots Guards, has been appointed Provisional Aide-de-Camp to Major-General A. J. H. Elliot, at the Curragh Camp.

We hear that Major E. H. H. Collen, Bengal Staff Corps, will be strongly recommended for the appointment of Deputy-Secretary to the Government of India, Military Department, when Colonel W. M. Lees retires shortly. Major Collen was formerly in the Royal Artillery, and has passed the Staff College, and is recognised as a most rising officer in the Indian service.

Brigadier-General Dunham Massy was to have vacated his command in India this week, and embark for England.

Colonel T. L. Bell, half-pay, lately commanding the Bristol Regimental District, and formerly the 1st Battalion, 6th Regiment, has been appointed Commandant of the Royal Victoria Hospital, Netley, vice Major-General Sir C. K. Pearson, who has vacated the appointment, on promotion.

It is in contemplation to abolish the appointment of Staff Captain and Assistant-Commandant of the Royal Victoria Hospital, Netley, held until lately by Colonel W. R. Farmar.

With this week's issue of the Volunteer Service Gazette is published a most useful map, which shows at a glance the distribution of the Volunteer Force throughout England. The idea is an excellent one, and the map will be invaluable as a reference in regimental and district orderly-rooms. It has been drawn and compiled by the Rev. Canon Mackey, and is as perfect in its way as a map of the kind could be. A similar map of Scotland will appear on April 26.

Alterations have recently taken place in the Russian Naval commands in the Mediterranean and Pacific. In the former, Rear-Admiral Tchebisheff has been superseded by Rear-Admiral Kaznakoff, Head of the Inspection Department of the Admiralty; and in the latter, Rear-Admiral Kopitoff has been replaced by Rear-Admiral Crown, of the Baltic Fleet. Crown is a descendant of an English Admiral of that name, who rose to a position of great distinction in the Russian Navy early in the present century. Less fortunate in some respects than his ancestor, the present Admiral was censured, and placed in the Reserve three years ago for losing the Imperial yacht Livadia in the Black Sea; but being a favourite of the Grand Duke Constantine, the decision of the court-martial was set aside, and since then he has held a series of excellent appointments.

In consequence of complaints of delay in the payment of capitalised annuities of Indian retired officers, payments in the case of officers in Europe shall be within two months, and in India within one month from the date the commutation is sanctioned. All commutation is payable in India. The rules apply only to officers retired since July, 1881.

An order issued by the commander of one of the French Army Corps has created a considerable amount of terror, in spite of the present mildness of the weather. The commanding officer in question has just decided that the officers in his army corps shall wear linen unmentionables in the winter as well as the summer. This decision, as a French military journal points out, is not in harmony with the regulations, and will be terribly hard upon officers of from 45 to 50 years of age in the month of December, when the ground is generally covered with frost and snow. The idea of the General seems to be thoroughly Republican, and to have arisen from a desire to place officers and men, if not quite on the same footing, in the same pantaloons. But he does not appear to have reflected that the linen overalls worn by the soldier are intended to protect the cloth pantaloons furnished by the State. Perhaps, however, the General wishes the officers also to wear two pair of trousers, and in this case the dire prognostications of the Avenir Militaire respecting the amount of rheumatic pains which this order will engender fall to the ground.

The India medal with the "North-West Frontier clasp," will be granted to the troops under the command of Colonel A. Macdonell, C.B., engaged against the Momunds. Those in possession of the medal will only receive the clasp.

The Italia Militaire has been devoting itself to the question of procuring horses for the Army. From these articles we gather that Italian Military men are very uneasy at the weakness of the Italian Cavalry, and the difficulty of procuring chargers. It appears that out of 670,000 horses inspected, not more than 95,000 were considered worth requisitioning. Now, the army on a peace establishment requires 26,000, and on a war footing 60,000 more. It is, therefore, clear that the horses remaining will not be sufficient to repair losses in the field. The Italia Militaire cries out lustily for good sires so that the race of horses may be improved, pointing out that it is the duty, not of the Minister of Agriculture, but of the Minister of War to see to this.

The Indian Staff Corps Officers' Defence Fund, under the presidency of Colonel Malleson, is soliciting further subscriptions from officers, to meet the necessary expenses. The case of the officers of the Staff Corps, briefly summarised, is as follows:—(1.) The pace of promotion is far behind that of the officers of the Imperial Army. (2.) They are superseded by their juniors. (3.) The Indian Staff Corps is brought into disfavour and ill-repute by the abnormal tardiness of promotion. It is impossible that Lord Kimberley cannot see this for himself; but it seems to be generally supposed that the energy and talent of the Office in Downing Street is unequal to coping with such a hydra-headed monster as the Staff Corps, and that the Secretary of State dreads the shock of yet another army of Field Officers. It was shown in a Bombay paper the other day, that the Madras Army may be expected soon to be officered by Colonels and Lieutenants only, and the condition of the other armies is not much better as regards this singularity. To do nothing is only to make matters worse; for the principle of Staff Corps promotion is not like wine, a thing that improves with keeping, but rather resembles fish, which steadily deteriorates day by day. The only questions really to be decided are,—What shall be done, and how shall it be done? Matters cannot possibly remain as they are; then the sooner the whole subject is taken up the better. Each Secretary for India leaves the burning question as a legacy for his successor, and meanwhile public funds are being recklessly expended on an army of Field Officers, for not one in every ten of whom would it be possible to provide Field-officer employment.

L'Avenir Militaire says that experiments are being made at St. Etienne with a new rifle, the invention of a French officer called M. Alexandre Picard. The mechanism of this central-fire rifle is said to be of the most simple description; it can be loaded with one movement, and fired 22 times in a minute. In addition to all this the stock appears to be so made that there is no kicking, nor is any spitting to be feared, although it can be seen if the rifle be loaded or not.

In a pamphlet Mr. Marvin has just issued, "Russia's Power of Seizing Herat," he says that "it may be a new geographical fact for some Englishmen to know that if they were to set out in a steamer 250 feet long from London Bridge, they could go with that steamer all the way to the Caspian Sea, the through voyage being accomplished by means of the magnificent canal system joining the Neva with the Caspian, thanks to which Russia could dispatch any number of transports from the Baltic to the Caspian." A fresh illustration of this fact is likely to be witnessed before long in the dispatch of a number of steamers from the Black Sea to the Caspian, viâ the Mediterranean, Baltic, and Volga. It seems that the Black Sea Steam Navigation Company is envious of the good freights secured by the Caspian steamers, and intends to transfer some to the Caspian to compete with them. To get from the Black Sea to the Caspian the vessels will perform a voyage of several thousand miles; whereas if there were any canal connecting the two seas north of the Caucasus range, it would consist of only a few hundred miles. Several projects for cutting a canal have been mooted of late years, but the expense would be too heavy for Russia to bear at present. In the meanwhile, English statesmen, who regard the Caspian as a sort of Dead Sea, should bear in mind Russia's activity, indicated by the intended despatch of vessels from Odessa to the Persian ports, and the rapid development that is taking place of her resources in a region which even the Duke of Argyll now admits to be the base of any future operations against India.

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

It has been notified throughout the command that during the present course of musketry instruction, the amount of individual firing for each day will be at the rate of 20 rounds per man, provided the training of parties of recruits is not interfered with. When the strength of a troop or company exceeds 60, the above amount may reduced, at the discretion of the officer commanding the regiment or battalion concerned.

The Divisional drag-hunt was held at Shamley Green, near Guildford, on Thursday. The meeting was a most successful one. Lieutenant-Colonel French, Queen's Bays, is now master of the drag-hunt, the affairs of which have prospered in his hands.

The Aldershot local competition in connection with the Royal Military Tournament at the Agricultural Hall, will take place here on May 1.

It is rumoured here that the Army Hospital Corps Depôt and Training School will shortly be removed from Aldershot to Netley.

The Divisional cricket season will open on the 1st prox., with a match between the Divisional eleven and the New College, Oxford, on the officers' club-ground. Major E. T. H. Hutton, Brigade-Major 1st Brigade, is honorary secretary of the Divisional Cricket Club.

THE SOUDAN EXPEDITION.

The following appeared in last night's Gazette:—

ADMIRALTY, April 10, 1884.

A despatch, of which the following is a copy, from Com. Ernest Rolfe, dated at Suakim, March 16, 1884, forwarded by Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., V.C., Commander-in-Chief of her Majesty's ships on the East Indian station, has been received at the Admiralty.

PROCEEDINGS OF NAVAL BRIGADE.

Suakim, March 16, 1884.

SIR,—In compliance with your orders the Naval Brigade (composed as per margin)* marched from Suakim, at 7 p.m., on the 11th inst., arriving at the first zeriba at half-past 11 p.m., where they bivouacked for the night.

2. The Naval Brigade left the zeriba on the following day at 1 p.m., and at half-past 5 p.m., the enemy was observed, but retired as the force advanced. Another zeriba was then formed, where we bivouacked for the night. At sunset the enemy appeared in large numbers in our front, about 1,400 yards distant.

3. Some 9-pounder shell were dropped among them, and two machine-guns opened fire, to which the enemy replied with their rifles. About 7 p.m. the firing ceased, but was renewed soon after midnight, and maintained till daylight.

At daylight more shell and machine-guns were fired, this had the effect of silencing the enemy till 8 a.m. The force advanced from the zeriba at 8 a.m., the Naval Brigade being attached to the 2nd Brigade in the form of square, the front of which was formed by half-battalions of 42nd and 65th, the left flank by a half-battalion of the 42nd, the right flank by a half-battalion of the 65th, the rear brought up by the Royal Marines, the Naval Brigade in rear of the 42nd Regt. in columns of half-batteries.

4. At twenty minutes past 8 the square advanced, and at half-past 8 the order was given to charge. The front of the square and the guns advanced at the double till within five yards of a steep nullah, the right half-battery was then brought into action on the right of the Black Watch, the left half-battery filling up the angle of the square between the half-battalions of the 42nd Regt.

5. Firing was at once commenced, but the wind being from the north the smoke from the guns and rifles prevented us, in a great measure, from seeing the enemy, who appeared to charge the right half-battery in large force which we seemed to be able easily to keep in check, but shortly afterwards a large body of the enemy charged our right flank and drove the whole force back to the left rear.

6. At this time it is with deep regret that I have to report that Lieuts. Almack, Houston Stewart, and Montrésor, as also seven men, were killed while gallantly defending their guns. Lieut. Conybeare also received a heavy blow from a club at the same time. After falling back about 200 yards the force formed up, and advancing, recaptured the guns, which were immediately again placed in action. The enemy then retreated, apparently completely routed, and the force proceeded down the right edge of a nullah to the wells at Temanhib, where we remained for dinner, returning to the zeriba in the evening.

7. All the wounded were placed under medical care, the dead being buried with funeral rites by the Rev. C. J. Todd, M.A., Gen. Sir Gerald Graham, Gen. Davis, and many officers and soldiers of the force attending. The brigade bivouacked at the zeriba for the night.

8. Next morning Lieuts. E. C. Moore and J. Brant joined in place of Lieuts. Almack and Montrésor.

A reconnaissance in force was made, the magazines of the enemy were destroyed, and the village burnt, the troops remaining at the hills of Temanhib for dinner, returning to the first zeriba in the evening, and to Suakim on the following day.

9. Lieut. Graham, who acted as my second in command, commanded the right half-battery, and rendered me able assistance. He also acted in the same capacity at the battle of El Teb.

I cannot represent the conduct of this officer too highly on both these occasions.

10. I wish specially to bring to your notice the conduct of Mr. Edward Tyndale Biscoe and Mr. Edward Matson Hewett, midshipmen of the Euryalus, who, in a critical moment, when three lieutenants were killed, took command of the subdivisions, and acted with great coolness and gallantry. I consider these young officers showed a readiness of resource in a moment of danger, which I trust may receive some mark of your approval.

11. The Rev. C. J. Todd, M.A., accompanied the force; and I consider that the gallantry shown by him in action, when unarmed, and his kindness to the wounded, are beyond praise.

12. Doctor Gimlette acted as medical officer to the force at both actions. I have already expressed my opinion of this officer's conduct in the first engagement, and need only now say that it was equally meritorious on the second occasion.

I have, &c.,

E. ROLFE, Commander, R.N.

Rear-Admiral Sir W. N. W. Hewett, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., V.C., Commander-in-Chief.

NAVAL BRIGADE KILLED AND WOUNDED.

KILLED.—Euryalus—Lieutenant W. H. H. Montrésor; John Strike, torpedo instructor; Thomas O'Brien, A.B.; Benjamin Parrick, A.B.; Richard Nicol, A.B.; Harry Coward, A.B. Briton—Lieutenant W. B. Almack; James McLernan, A.B. Dryad—Lieutenant Houston Stewart; James L. Howarth, A.B.

WOUNDED.—Hecla—Lieut. C. J. M. Conybeare. Euryalus—Joseph Chetwin, coxswain, 2nd class, slightly (hand); Frank Freeman, coxswain, 2nd class, dangerously, spear wound. Briton—William Wood, gunner's mate, bullet through thigh; Frederick Johnson, armourer's crew; John Cross, A.B. Sphinx—William G. Newlove, A.B. Hecla—William Buckett, A.B.

Euryalus, Suakim, March 19, 1884.

Submitted for information, while deeply regretting the loss of the Naval Brigade sustained, especially in Lieuts. Almack, Houston Stewart, and Montrésor, by whose death the Navy have lost the services 'of three most promising officers, I have great pleasure in forwarding the accompanying report from Com. Rolfe of my flagship, who was in command of the Brigade, and would most strongly bring that officer's name for the very favourable consideration of their Lordships, also that of my Flag Lieut. W. H. B. Graham; the other officers mentioned in the despatch appear to well deserve their Lordships' consideration.

Capt. Baldwin, commanding the Royal Marines on board the Euryalus, also did good service as Adjt. of the Marine Battalion. W. HEWETT, Rear-Admiral.

The Secretary of the Admiralty.

The Times says:—"The relinquishment by Lieut.-Gen. Sir Frederick FitzWygram of his appointment as Inspector-Gen. of Cavalry in Great Britain and Commander of the Cavalry Brigade at Aldershot is a serious loss to the mounted branch of the service. The office includes a close personal superintendence of all details connected with the three or four regiments usually quartered at Aldershot, as well as a general supervision of the other Cavalry regiments stationed throughout England and Scotland in the matter of equipment, equitation, horse management, and drills. Sir Frederick FitzWygram is a regularly qualified veterinary surgeon, and the author of one or two standard books upon the treatment of horses, and during his five years' command he has applied the advantages thus implied to the best interests of the Cavalry service. But it is not only by reason of his exceptional qualifications that his cavalry inspectorship invites special notice. He went into his work earnestly and thoroughly, and in a spirit of just and enlightened consideration for the public interest and the contentment of the troopers serving under him. A general's inspection, which in too many instances is little more than a formal proceeding, carried on perfunctorily, and leaving hardly any beneficial results behind it, was with him a different matter, as slack and inefficient officers found to their cost. Although a most kindly man, he did not allow his feeling in this respect to interfere with what the public have a right to expect. Undue consideration for an unfit lieutenant-colonel or major is a direct injury to the comfort and efficiency of those serving under his command, and Sir Frederick FitzWygram did what he could, not always, we fear, effectually, to prevent regimental commands falling into the hands of those who were not qualified by judgment and professional knowledge for that most influential and responsible of military positions. The conventional tone of the Army upon such matters does not run so generally in this direction that the resolute and honest discharge of those duties for the public interest is not a subject for remark."

Col. D. B. Young, Bombay S.C., Controller of Military Accounts, Bengal, died of cholera on March 18, aged 52 years.

The Western Morning News says:—"Col. W. F. Butler, C.B., A.D.C., Assist.-Adjt. and Qrmr.-Gen. of the Western District, is expected to return on the expiration of his leave, and resume his duties at Government House, Devonport."

THE EASTER VOLUNTEER REVIEW.

The General Orders for the Volunteer Field Day, near Portsmouth, have been issued from the War Office. They contain the usual regulations for the assembling of the men at the various railway-stations, and the forwarding them to their destination. The following is given as the "general idea" of the operations:—

"A Western Force is moving from Salisbury to reinforce the garrison of Hilsea. The commander of a Northern Force at Guildford resolves to endeavour to intercept this movement.

"OPERATIONS OF FRIDAY, APRIL 11.—The advanced guard of the Northern Force, having reached Liphook the previous evening, arrives in the neighbourhood of Petersfield, covering the roads leading to the Portsdown Ridge.

"OPERATIONS OF SATURDAY, APRIL 12.—The advanced guard of the Northern Force continues its advance, drives back the weak outposts of the Hilsea garrison, and gains the Portsdown Ridge. The outposts of the Hilsea garrison occupy Cosham. The main body of the Northern Force is supposed to reach the Portsdown Ridge during the night. The Western Force arrives at Fareham during the night.

"OPERATIONS OF MONDAY, APRIL 14.—The Western Force endeavours to carry out its object, aided by a sortie made by the Hilsea garrison. The Northern Force endeavours to prevent the junction."

The "General Instructions" are as follow:—"1. The Western Force is represented by the Volunteer Corps detraining at Fareham, together with an Infantry Brigade from Gosport, and one Field Battery (rendezvous, Fort Nelson). 2. The Northern Force consists of the Volunteer Corps detraining at Havant (rendezvous, Fort Purbrook). 3. The Hilsea Garrison is formed by the Regular Troops from Portsmouth (rendezvous, Hilsea Lines with advance posts at Cosham). 4. The Advanced Guard of the Northern Force is represented by the Volunteer Marching Columns. 5. The Outposts of the Hilsea Garrison are represented by small bodies of Cavalry and Infantry, pushed forward on April 12 to meet the Marching Columns. 6. The forts on Portsdown Hill are supposed to be non-existent. 7. The bridges over the Hilsea Channel are supposed to be protected by a tête-de-pont, which prevents their being destroyed by artillery fire. 8. Neither of the forces will advance from the rendezvous before the signal gun fires for the commencement of the operations, at 12 noon. 9. At the conclusion of the manœuvres, the whole of the troops will assemble on the heights, half-way between Forts Widley and Southwick."

In view of the possibility of an outbreak of fire in any of the villages where the troops happen to be quartered, Lieut. C. J. Fox, 3rd Batn. Duke of Cambridge's Middlesex Regt., who made the whole of the fire arrangements for the march to Brighton last year, has again been instructed by Col. Moncrieff (Scots Guards) with this important duty. Lieut. Fox takes with him a fire-engine as well as several dractical firemen.

THE NEW ARMY ACT.

The Times says:—"The Government have agreed to modify the very severe provision of the Army Act, under which a sentence of penal servitude can be awarded to soldiers, who, having been discharged with ignominy, have upon subsequent enlistment concealed the circumstances of their discharge. Many of these men are led into the commission of their offence by necessitous circumstances. However expedient it may be to rid the service of bad characters, it is felt that this object may be well attained by sentences of imprisonment with hard labour, and without having recourse to the more severe punishment, which was for the first time introduced into the Act of 1879. The acceptance by Lord Hartington of Mr. Hopwood's amendment in this sense is indeed but a part of the policy indicated in the General Circular lately issued from the Horse Guards with the view of mitigating the severity of court-martial sentences, and enjoining the summary disposal by commanding officers of the many venial offences that are now tried by court-martial. There appears to be no doubt that the circular in question will tend much to help recruiting, without at the same time endangering discipline. It is the first recognition in this respect of the fact that the Army is now largely composed of young soldiers fresh from civil life, and therefore unaccustomed to many of the strict obligations incidental to military service. To punish these men with long terms of imprisonment and hard labour for offences inspired often by ignorance or thoughtlessness, and not having serious results, is now officially declared to be unnecessary in the interests of discipline. But while the circular thus inculcates more leniency, no corresponding alteration has been made in the Queen's Regulations bearing upon the subject. Under these regulations a commanding officer is empowered to punish summarily certain offences only, for the most part neglects, short absences, drunkenness, loss of equipment, and conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline. All other offences must be referred by him to superior authority. Many of these latter may be reduced in degree to even a more venial category than the former by the surrounding circumstances. For instance, what is called insubordinate language to a superior officer in the great majority of instances is little more than an indication of bad manners, or short temper, or forgetfulness of the deference due to even slightly superior rank, and although thus a proper matter for punishment, it clearly ought not to be visited with heavy sentences of imprisonment with hard labour, such as in civil life are awarded only for marked brutality or serious fraud. There are many other military offences which, though having a grave signification when formulated in the shape of a charge before a court-martial, may yet be reduced in degree by surrounding circumstances to a very minor complexion, and which, therefore, might fitly be dealt with by the comparatively domestic tribunal of the commanding officer. It savours of a contradiction that general officers should be enjoined by the circular to see that commanding officers exhaust their own powers of punishment before having recourse to a higher authority, and at the same time to continue to forbid them exercising their discretion in cases manifestly suitable for summary disposal. The gravity of an offence often consists less in its formal description than in the intent with which it is committed, and if the salutary injunctions of the new circular are to be satisfactorily carried out, the Queen's regulations should be made to conform to them."

The Times of India says:—"Col. W. M. Lees succeeds to his off-reckonings on April 14, and so leaves a vacancy in the department in which he has worked for the last 17½ years. Major H. H. Collen has been officiating as deputy, and during the time Lieut.-Col. Newmarch has been officiating as Secretary for Col. Chesney, has been doing the work of Accountant-General. Col. Lees's departure will, no doubt, give a step right through the Department."

THE MILITARY COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Permit me to draw the attention of parents of intending Militia Subalterns to para. 17 of the Militia Regulations for Army Commissions, by which the application to compete must be forwarded to the Military Secretary, prior to Jan. 1 and July 1, respectively, after which no application will be entertained. With regard to the last-mentioned date, it is laid down that the second training must have been actually completed before July 1 for sending in the application for permission to compete in the September examination. Now, Sir, those Subalterns who have the good-fortune to belong to regiments which are in the habit of training early, are able to compete immediately after the completion of their second training, viz., in September, while those who belong to regiments which do not complete their trainings before July 1 are unable to compete until March in the following year, even if they be senior to those who have been so fortunate as to complete their second training before July 1. The authorities will not even allow a subaltern to save the date, viz., July 1, by training with another regiment in addition to his own. So many subalterns have suffered by this unjust rule, that parents should allow their sons to join those regiments only which are in the habit of completing their trainings before July 1, and avoid those which train late. Surely the authorities could change the date from July 1 to Aug. 1, and thus remove a great injustice to many subalterns whose regiments do not train early. The Militia is deplorably short of subalterns; the authorities could well afford to render the service more attractive by removing minor difficulties, even if only to counter-balance the severity of the Military Competitive Examination.—I am, &c.,

MILITIA.

WHO IS TO BLAME?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I know nothing of Admiral Willes, nor am I able to give any opinion as to his professional or personal qualifications, but I think the following facts ought to be known:—A boy, whom I knew well, after passing creditably through his course on board the Britannia, went out to the China station, and was placed on board the Iron Duke. His letters home used to be graphic and excellent, unusually so for a youngster's, full of clever accounts of all that he saw and did. A chart that he sent of the summer cruise of the Iron Duke in Japanese waters in 1879 is an admirable piece of work. No report against the boy was ever made. Suddenly he ceased to write to his friends, who, for many months, received nothing in reply to their frequent letters. The boy is now in a lunatic asylum, and his case is considered by the medical officers almost, if not quite hopeless. This mental illness was coming on for two years, and it seems to have been no one's duty to communicate with the boy's friends on the subject. The news of his condition came to them as a sorrowful surprise when the Iron Duke was nearing, and they were looking forward to welcoming him home. Now, I do not for one moment mean to imply that Admiral Willes, or Capt. Tracey, or Com. Atkinson, or any one else was to blame for this poor boy's illness. I have, indeed, heard, in connection with this case that "Admirals cannot be expected to bother their heads about a parcel of midshipmen," though Admirals are but men, and midshipmen are, at any rate, boys. But looking on from outside, and with no knowledge of the interior workings of professional machinery, I do say, without hesitation, that it was the duty of somebody on board the Iron Duke to intimate to this boy's friends, as soon as any symptoms showed themselves, and when it might not have been too late for remedial measures to be tried, the condition into which he was getting, and that grave neglect occurred somewhere,—grave enough to call for searching inquiry,—I am, &c.,

A QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Under present regulations, officers and non-commissioned officers who have served eight years abroad can claim to serve at home for eight years. But how is this to be done, when both battalions are abroad at the same time? The Secretary of State for War stated the other night that there were four regiments with both battalions abroad, but one would come home. He would have conferred a great favour on all concerned, if he had said which the fortunate battalion is. Does any one know?—I am, &c.,

A FUSILIER.

EASTERN DIVISION, ROYAL ARTILLERY. Capt. Pead, 3rd Brigade, has passed the senior voluntary examination in tactics. This officer holds in addition a first-class (two months' course) certificate from the Artillery School of Instruction, Woolwich. He has also qualified in the riding school, and for promotion to major.

The Staff College point-to-point race came off on Tuesday last, from Mr. Corden's farm, Farly Hill, to Mr. Lane's farm, Wokingham, about three miles. The weather was lovely, and there was a very large attendance of the county families to see the race. The result was as follows:—Capt. Paget, 7th Hussars, first; Capt. Wyndham, 21st Hussars, second; Capt. Beaufort, R.A., third. The late rains had made the course rather heavy, which told severely on the light-weight horses.

The Times says:—"The following officers, who have recently passed the final examination at the Staff College, are ordered to be attached to corps from the 15th inst. at Aldershot, for instructions under the Staff College Regulations:—To the Cavalry—Lieut. Stone, R.A.; Lieut.-Col. Herbert, Grenadier Guards (specially ordered to join on May 1); Capt. Settle, R.E.; Lieut. Codrington, Coldstream Guards; Capt. Sawyer, 2nd Royal Lancaster Regt.; Capt. Mortimer, 1st Royal Fusiliers; Capt. Swaine, 2nd Royal Inniskillen Fusiliers; Major Wilkinson, 1st South Lancashire Regt.; and Capt. Verner, 3rd Rifle Brigade. To the Royal Artillery—Major Grant, 4th Hussars; Capt. Phipps, 7th Hussars; Major the Hon. H. G. Gough, 14th Hussars; Major Groves, 1st Royal West Kent Regt.; Capt. Barter, 2nd South Yorkshire Regt.; Major St. Clair, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders; and Capt. Barrow, Bengal S.C. To the 3rd Infantry Brigade—Major Beckett, 3rd Hussars."

A Camp of Exercise for British troops from all parts of India is proposed to be held at Poona next cold season.

The late Capt. J. Davies, for many years quartermaster of the Royal Military College, died suddenly before he could obtain the pension due for his long services. Had he lived but a few weeks longer, he would have realised by his pension an adequate income, but his sudden and unexpected death has left his family almost destitute. At a meeting of the officers of the College, called together at Government House, on the 22nd ult., by Gen. Sir R. Taylor, it was proposed to raise a subscription to assist the widow to provide herself and family with a new home—and itwas decided to call upon officers of the College, and all who have known the late Capt. Davies during his long and honourable career, to contribute any sum, however small, towards this most desirable object. Subscriptions will be received by the hon. secretary, Lieut.-Col. H. M. Moorsom, Royal Military College, Farnborough.

GREENWICH HOSPITAL SCHOOL.

The Admiralty have approved of the scheme for the re-organisation of Greenwich Hospital School, drawn by the Naval Pensions Committee, and published last year in these columns. The general character of the scheme now adopted is as follows:—The School has been divided into two grand divisions, to be called, respectively, the Upper Nautical and the Nautical School. The most promising boys will be sent to the former. They will be selected by competitive examination and character. In the upper school the full-time system will be carried out, and every means will be afforded the boys to enable them to qualify for shipwright apprentices, the Merchant Service, writerships, ship's stewards' boys, and the Navy. Their Lordships hope that in the future many valuable Warrant Officers and Gunnery and Torpedo Instructors will graduate from this school. In the Nautical or lower school the attendance will be full, half, or quarter-time, according to age. All boys will attend full time at school from the date of their admission until they are 12½ years of age. From 12½ to 14 years of age, or until they have passed the V. Standard of the new Code, the boys will attend only half-time at school, and quarter-time when the V. Standard has been passed, if over 12½ years of age, and at 14 years of age if below that standard. Between the ages of 12½ and 14 years, the boys will devote quarter-time at seamanship or until the V. Standard has been passed, and half-time afterwards. Also quarter-time at trades, assisting at cleaning, scrubbing, and other domestic work of the school after 12½ years of age. Commenting on the above, the Hampshire Telegraph remarks that:—"It need not be shown that the advantages to be obtained by clever lads educated in Greenwich Hospital School were very much greater in the past than they are now or than they are likely to be in the future. Times are altered. The competition for a start in the world is so great for all classes that it was only natural great changes should be made in the interest of the sons of the better classes. We hope, however, that the nearest compensation for this loss will be given in according to the Upper Nautical School boys every means for becoming officers in the Merchant Service, and of filling the best of the subordinate positions in the Navy. While for these positions a good mathematical education will be an advantage, care should be taken not to over-educate, as by so doing a desire for advancement will be induced which cannot be gratified, and which will expend itself in the form of discontent. The full time at school should not end at 12½, but at the age of 13, for many lads will enter whose educational knowledge will be very low, and whose only real schooling will be the year and a half, or at most two years, they will have been in the institution. Half-time at school is really only valuable as enabling the lad to hold what he has acquired,—for advance in a course it is not worth much. Quarter-time in school will be practically no school at all for the ignorant fellows, of whom there are sure to be several, who will enter at a later age. Experience will, no doubt, bring many modifications, and the authorities probably hope for the time when there will be very few ignorant lads above 11 years old. As a beginning, it is gratifying to feel there are great improvements in the new scheme, and notably that which puts an end to so much of the unhealthy, as regards its effect on the physique and child-like nature of the boys, industrial work which has had such stress laid on it for years past."

THE SURVEY OF THE NILE.

Captain Molyneux, of H.M.S. Invincible, and the Naval officers despatched by Vice-Admiral the Lord John Hay to survey the upper waters of the Nile, have returned to Alexandria, and have rejoined their ships. The expedition has completed a survey of the Nile as far as the Second Cataract. Capt. Molyneux, in his report to the Admiral, states that everywhere along the route he found a belief in the Mahdi to be prevalent among the population. At the same time, there is no danger that the people will rise unless the Mahdi himself appears, with a strong following. The natives, he adds, disbelieve in the English victories in the Eastern Soudan. From the observations he has made, Capt. Molyneux thinks an invasion of Egypt by the Mahdi from the south to be possible, but not probable. The sympathies of the population are assured, and so the Mahdi could obtain provisions throughout the whole of his advance; and, by marching through the desert and keeping close to the strip of cultivated land, he might manage to steer clear of the defensive works along the Nile. Still, such an invasion would be a stupendous task, and is not likely to be attempted. The Nile Capt. Molyneux reports to be practicable for Naval operations with launches and small steamboats as far as the Second Cataract. The Egyptian authorities are in favour of removing the railway plant between Halfa and a point 70 miles above the Second Cataract, thus dismantling the line. Capt. Molyneux will strongly report against this step. If, says the correspondent of the Standard, instead of dismantling the line, the Government would complete it, the retreat from Khartoum up the Nile would be practicable throughout, and Military operations would also be greatly facilitated, in case such should become necessary. The risks of a campaign in that country for European troops are, however, very great, and Capt. Molyneux thinks that the Berber line is the proper one. The expedition has completely surveyed the river. Nothing further has been heard from Gen. Gordon. The last telegram received at Cairo from Berber states that the numbers of the rebels round the town are increasing. "The declaration that the Government will protect Gen. Gordon when he is in danger is," the Times' correspondent says, "akin to saying that it will remove an individual safely from the top of a barrel of gunpowder when the explosion occurs. It is not asserted that the General is in immediate personal danger. He may possibly be alive three months hence, and it is equally possible that he will be killed in a week. If assistance could be sent to him by telegraph, delaying it for some days might be excusable. But, after all, if an expedition started to-morrow, the chances are against its arriving in time."

The Army.

1st Life Guards. Speaking of the departure of the regiment from Windsor, the Holy Trinity Magazine says:—"The 1st Life Guards have gone from Windsor, and the Royal Horse Guards, otherwise the Blues, reign in their stead. But the continuity of the good feeling is, so far as we are concerned, not affected whether 'they of the Household' wear blue or red. It is something in these difficult, critical, and censorious times, to be able to say that 400 well-favoured men, of the flower of the Army of England, can go their way, and that, notwithstanding the temptations that are ever open and offered to good fellows, they can leave behind them an unblemished record; and this is what the 1st Life Guards do. As it was when these regiments were first raised, the soldiers of the Body Guard were always saluted as 'Gentlemen of the Household Cavalry,' and so it is now, for never has so proud a title and salute been better earned. The Life Guards have gone; the Blues have come. Friends have left us; friends are here. If we have changed the colour, we have not changed the kind. A year hence the Blues too will have gone their way, and no one doubts but that when their year is gone, an unblemished record they will also leave behind."

Royal Horse Guards (Blue). The spear-thrust from which Col. Burnaby is still suffering passed through the upper part of the left arm above the elbow. But the wound is healing fast, and in a short time the electors of the great constituency for which he is a candidate, will have an opportunity of recording their opinions respecting the attack which was made upon him in Parliament, for the part he took in the field in the recent engagement with the Arabs at El Teb.

5th Dragoon Guards. The annual regimental steeplechases took place on the 3rd inst., at Cockey Hill, near York. Winners:—The 5th Dragoon Guards' Sweepstakes, Mr. D. Croft's Collegian; the 5th Dragoon Guards' Regimental Challenge Cup, Major Amcott's Holderness; the Red Coat Steeplechase, Mr. Robinson's Ryedale; the 5th Dragoon Guards' Subalterns' Cup, Mr. Baird's Bravo; the 5th Dragoon Guards' Consolation Race, Lieut.-Col. Jee's Lady Florence.

5th Lancers. Major Carmichael returns to regimental duty from service on the Intelligence Staff at headquarters.

6th Dragoons. Mr. W. H. Williamson, whose death is announced as having occurred at Bentham Hill, Tunbridge Wells, on the 2nd inst., in the 84th year of his age, served for a short time in the regt. On leaving the Army he devoted himself to field sports, and was for some time Master of the Durham County Hounds.

8th Hussars. Mr. H. F. C. Cust, of Cockayne Hatley, Bedfordshire, and of Ellesmere House, Shropshire, late M.P. for Grantham, died on Saturday, aged 65. He served some years with the 24th Regiment at the Cape of Good Hope and in India, and was present as a volunteer at the battle of Maharajpore, in 1843, for which he received a medal. He afterwards changed into the 8th Hussars, and was aide-de-camp for nine years to four successive Viceroys of Ireland, to one of whom, the late Earl of Eglinton, he became private secretary. In 1854 he left the Army and took up his residence at Ellesmere, in Shropshire, where he managed the estates of the late and present Earls Brownlow, and where he resided until his death.

9th Lancers. Capt. Lord W. Beresford is attached to the garrison class at Umballa, and Major the Hon. H. Legge is officiating for him as military secretary to the Viceroy.

10th Hussars. A letter has been received at Darlington, from one of the 10th Hussars in Egypt, in which the writer says:—"The reception of Baker Pasha, our old Colonel, on board the Jumna, was grand. The band was formed up, and one troop detailed to act as guard of honour. They gave him a general salute, and afterwards the band played 'Auld Lang Syne,' followed by hearty cheers from the men. The old General fairly cried at the thought of meeting his old regiment, He handed it over to Colonel the Hon. C. C. Molyneaux 11 years ago. He dined on board that evening, and he particularly requested that the band should play some of the old tunes of former days. He afterwards went into action with our regiment, and fought until he received a wound in the breast and nearly had his eye taken out."

14th Hussars. Capt. Hill is about to retire.

15th Hussars. Capt. Webbe rejoins head-quarters from Staff employ.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Col. H. P. Lane, late Madras Artillery, died on the 9th ult., on passage to England. The deceased was a son of the late Mr. Lane, of Ipswich, and entered the Army in 1855. He became a first lieut. in 1858, at which time he was serving in the Central Indian campaign, where he took part in the affairs of Moorwarrah and Badgaum, and was also engaged in the attack of the Konah Pass (mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp). He was promoted capt. in 1865, major in 1872, lieut.-col. in 1877, and col. in 1881. He was for some time first-class comy. of ordnance at Madras.

Lieut.-Col. de Winton has left for the Congo, for service under the Belgian Government.

Col. T. E. Hughes, Inspector-Gen. of Ordnance, Bengal, was to have taken up his new appointment as Director-Gen. of Ordance for India on the 1st inst. His office will be permanently located at Simla.

Major R. F. Lewis will, it is stated, be appointed Inspector-Gen. of Ordnance, Bengal.

Grenadier Guards. The 1st Batn., at Chelsea, is expected to relieve 2nd Batn. Scots Guards at Dublin in September.

Scots Guards. The 2nd Batn., at Dublin, will return to England in September, and be quartered in London.

1st, or Royal Scots. Capt. Tombs, 2nd Batn., is about to retire.

9th Norfolk Regiment. Lieut. Besant, 1st Batn., has joined the Egyptian Army for duty.

12th Suffolk Regiment. Major Phillips, 1st Batn., has leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate.

14th West Yorkshire Regiment. The Bombay Gazette says:—"The appointment of Major Hutchinson to the Adjutant-General's Department, Simla, as head of the Musketry Department, is not viewed by the Army generally in a favourable light, as that officer has never held the appointment of regimental instructor or circle inspector of musketry. This, however, is not his fault. Major Hutchinson is a very popular officer, and has won golden opinions from adjutant and commandant of Volunteers."

16th Bedfordshire Regiment. Col. J. W. Helyar, lieut.-col. on the Retired Full-pay List, died at 81 Belgrave Road, S.W., on the 8th inst. He joined the Army Nov. 25, 1848; became lieut, July 23, 1852; capt., March 10, 1858; major, July 6, 1867; lieut.-col., July 13, 1876; and col., July 2, 1879.

17th Leicestershire Regiment. The head-quarters of the 1st Batn. moved from Portsmouth to Aldershot on Tuesday.

18th Royal Irish. Lieut. Bretherton, 1st Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the Queen's Own Corps of Guides, on probation.

24th South Wales Borderers. Gen. P. Taylor, K.H., colonel of the regiment, of Pennington House, Lymington, Hants, died on Saturday. The deceased was the eldest surviving son of the late Mr. W. Taylor, Chief Justice of Jamaica, and was born in 1796. He entered the Army as a cornet in 1811, obtained a lieutenant's commission in 1812, and was promoted to a captaincy in 1820. He served with the 22nd Dragoons in the East Indies until their return to Europe and disbandment in 1820. He was in the field in 1815 and 1816, and during the whole of the Mahratta war in 1817-19; and he greatly distinguished himself at the siege of Capaul-droog. In 1823-4, the gallant officer was employed in the Cape Cavalry against the Caffres, and from 1854 to 1857 he was a colonel on the Staff at the Cape of Good Hope, where, as a brigadier, at a "period of peculiar difficulty and imminently threatened war," he commanded a large force in Caffraria, "with approbation and thanks publicly recorded." In 1860-61, he was Commander of the Forces and Lieutenant-Governor of Jamaica and its dependencies. In 1861, he was appointed col. of the 24th Foot. He attained field rank in 1857, became lieut.-gen. in 1863, and gen. in 1871. Lieut.-Col. Upcher, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on private affairs.

30th East Lancashire Regiment. Major Clowes and Lieuts. Morse, Capper, and Reade have been appointed to do duty with the convalescent depôt at Dalhousie.

32nd Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry. The Times says:—"Lieut. Ireland has been appointed Superintendent of Gymnastics at Chatham, vice Capt. Butler, 14th Regt."

35th Royal Sussex Regiment. Mr. A. P. Hawthorn, late of the regiment, died at 33 Sussex Gardens, W., on the 7th inst.

46th Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry. Major J. F. Grant died at Cheltenham on the 3rd inst., aged 44 years. He served in the Egyptian War of 1882, and was present at the reconnaissance in force from Alexandria on Aug. 5, in the engagement at Magfar and Tel-el-Mahuta, and at Kassassin (medal and the Khedive's star). He joined the Army April 25, 1850, and became major, July 1, 1881

ROYAL MARINES.

The Marines left behind at Suakim are ordered to embark on board the hired transport Utopia as soon as she arrives, and has disembarked the battalion of Egyptian troops belonging to General Wood's army which has been detailed to garrison Suakim.

52nd Oxfordshire Light Infantry. We have received the following communication:—"Would any reader kindly inform me what officer carried the colours of the 52nd Regt. at Waterloo? A short time since, in an old curiosity shop at Dover, I purchased a portrait in oil, 36 in. by 18 in. of a very handsome young fellow in the uniform of the Waterloo period. On the back of the canvas was the following in a lady's handwriting:—'The portrait of Major J. Frere May, taken in Paris in 1815, soon after the battle of Waterloo, where he carried the colours of the 52nd Regt. He died on his passage home from India in 1836 or 1837 as major of the 41st Regt.,' also on the frame in pencil are 'Reis,' 'Lady May,' the canvas is stamped 'Cherrie, Paris, 1815.' With the exception of the frame, it is in a splendid condition, and I believe it to be valuable.—I am, &c., W. Stanley, Serjeant, Royal Artillery, Dover."

54th Dorsetshire Regiment. Capt. Tidy has been detailed for duty with the Intelligence Branch of the Quartermaster-General's Department in India. Lieut. Broughton, having passed a successful examination for the Pay Department, has been appointed pymr. of the 8th Hussars, at Meerut.

58th Northamptonshire Regiment. Major Churchill returns to regimental duty from the Staff of the York district. Capt. R. H. Harrison, late of the regiment, died at Brandsburton on the 3rd inst., aged 38 years.

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. An exchange has been sanctioned between Majors Morris, 4th Batn., and Archer, 2nd Batn. Capt. Marsham and Lieut. Pakenham, 4th Batn., have been detailed for duty with the convalescent depôt, Dalhousie. Col. Mackenzie, Commandant of the Royal Military Asylum, Chelsea, who under the age clauses of the Royal Warrant would have been placed on the Retired List last month, has been granted an extension of his tenure in order to complete the term of seven years in his appointment. So that the statement of a contemporary which we quoted last week that Brevet Lieut.-Col. Cramer is to get the appointment is unfounded. Lieut.-Col. G. C. Kelly, major on the Retired Full-pay List, died at 18 Rivers Street, Bath, on the 6th inst., aged 64 years. The deceased joined the ranks of the Army, and obtained his commission as qrmr., April 2, 1854. He was appointed ensign, May 1, 1855; lieut., Nov. 16, 1856; capt., Oct. 6, 1864; major, Jan. 5, 1876; and retired with the hon. rank of lieut.-col., Aug. 12, 1876. He served in the Mutiny Campaign of 1857-58 (medal with clasp).

61st Gloucester Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Heywood has been granted leave from India to England for 15 months, on private affairs. Major Dickin has leave from India to England for 15 months, on urgent private affairs.

65th York and Lancaster Regiment. The Western Morning News says:—"In accordance with instructions received from the Quartermaster-General at the Horse Guards, the arrangements made for the location of the 1st Batn. York and Lancaster Regt. at Raglan Barracks, Devonport, have been cancelled, and that corps will now be stationed at Dover, instead of at Devonport. The order to move the 2nd Batn. of the South Lancashire Regt. to Aldershot has also been cancelled, and that battalion will still remain at Devonport. The reason for changing the station of the York and Lancaster Regt. is understood to be that in consequence of that regiment having been so long in India, and having a number of men in an impaired state of health, it is considered advisable to station the battalion in a less relaxing air than Devonport, and consequently, Dover—being much milder and less exposed—has been selected. The men, families, and baggage of the York and Lancaster Regt., now at Devonport, will be moved to Dover as soon as the necessary arrangements have been made for their conveyance."

68th Durham Light Infantry. Major C. Covey died at Allahabad, on the 22nd ult., from the results of an accident. He served in the New Zealand War of 1864-66 as adjt. of the regiment and as field adjt. of the Tamanga Field Force. He was present at the attack on Gate Pah (mentioned in despatches), and the engagement at Te Ranga (mentioned in despatches, medal). He joined the Army June 8, 1855, and became major May 26, 1880, prior to which he was for five years adjt. of the London Scottish Rifle Volunteers.

72nd Seaforth Highlanders. The Liverpool Courier says:—"The exact position of the late Prince Leopold in connection with the Seaforth Highlanders does not appear to be generally understood. Until the year 1882 he had no military rank, but in that year he received two commissions—one, dated March 4, 1882, as honorary colonel of the Militia Battalion of the Seaforth Highlanders, and the previous one, on Jan. 21, as 'colonel in the Army.' The Seaforth Highlanders, since July, 1881, consist of two line and one Militia battalion. The 1st Line battalion was formerly known as the 72nd or Duke of Albany's Own Highlanders—a title borne by it for many years before the late royal Duke was born, as its title referred to the Duke of York and Albany. This regiment was raised about the year 1793, and its earliest services for which honours were accorded were in India, and afterwards at the Cape. In the early part of the Crimean War the 72nd were at Fredericton, New Brunswick, but were brought home and soon afterwards sent out to the seat of war. In the late Afghanistan campaign the 72nd was highly praised by Sir Frederick Roberts. This regiment was the only one wearing the feathered bonnet as well as the plaid trews, the other three non-kilted Highland regiments having shakos. In 1881, when joined to the kilted 78th, both battalions were assimilated in having complete Highland costume. The 2nd Batn., late the 78th, was the second Highland regiment that had borne that number. It was raised early in 1793, and for many years was styled 'The Ross-shire Buffs,' and a few years ago the additional title of the Seaforth Highlanders was appended to its designation, and first saw service in Holland, 1794-5, afterwards at the Cape, and in many Indian battles, including Assaye in 1803 and the relief of Lucknow in 1857. Since it was formed, the battalion has had very little home service. In the East it has, besides being in India, served at Java, Ceylon, Persia, &c. In 1879 the 78th again proceeded to India, and is now there. The present title is a combination of the designations of the old 72nd and 78th, viz., 'Seaforth Highlanders (Ross-shire Buffs, the Duke of Albany's).' Each territorial regiment under the present organisation has two Line battalions, and two or more Militia battalions. The Seaforth Highlanders have but one Militia battalion, the late 'Highland Rifle Militia' representing the counties of Ross, Caithness, Sutherland, and Cromarty. These corps, it will be remembered, volunteered en masse for foreign service a few years since, and the action of its commander, Col. Ross, for inviting such volunteering led to much discussion. Another thing in connection with this Scotch Militia battalion is that for many years its senior medical officer was Surg. Wm. Brydon, C.B., of Khyber Pass memory, and who is represented in Miss Elizabeth Thompson's painting of 'The Survivor of an Army.' As mentioned above, the late Prince Leopold, Duke of Albany, was the hon. colonel of this battalion."

88th Connaught Rangers. The regt. was expected to reach Bareilly on the 4th inst.

96th Manchester Regiment. Capt. Nash and Lieuts. Maxwell and Cleland-Henderson have been detailed for duty at the convalescent depôt at Dalhousie.

2nd West India Regiment. The officers now attached to the battalions at Chatham are ordered to join their corps at Sierra Leone, embarking in the mail steamer which leaves during the ensuing month.

Pay Department. Major Farwell, on his way home from India in the Jumna, was stopped st Suakim, and told to take over the duties of chief paymaster to the troops in the expeditionary force in the Soudan. Majors Craig and Kneller are also serving with the force, as are also Majors Baird, Forster, and Brett, with their regiments.

Medical Department. Deputy-Surg.-Gen. J. J. Thompson has proceeded from Aldershot to Dublin, having been appointed P.M.O. of that district.

The Gazette.

TUESDAY EVENING.

ARMY.

INDIA OFFICE, April 8, 1884.

The Queen has approved of the retirement from the service of the under-mentioned officers of her Majesty's Indian Military Forces:—Lieut.-Col. A. O'H. Clay, of the Madras S.C. (March 21); Deputy Surg.-Gen. J. J. Clarke, M.D., of the Bengal Army (Jan. 14); and Surg.-Major R. C. Thorp, M.D., of the Bombay Army (Feb. 6).

Brevet.

The under-mentioned officers are granted a step of hon. rank on retirement:—

To be Colonel:—Lieut.-Col. A. O'H. Clay, of the Madras S.C. (March 21.)

To be Deputy-Surgeon-General:—Brigade-Surg. B. Williamson, of the Madras Army (Jan. 27).

Col. Henderson has taken over charge of the office of Superintendent of Thuggee and Dacoity at Ajmere.

The Madras Mail says:—"Col. D. J. McGregor, commanding R.A., Eastern District, has assumed temporary command of the Eastern District, from Brigdr.-Gen. R. C. Stewart, C.B. Gen. Stewart, as a last act of his official position, and by virtue of the powers invested in him under section 57 (1) Army Act 1881, has been pleased to direct the release of all court-martial prisoners undergoing sentences in the civil jail at Madras and military prisons, Fort St. George. Gen. Stewart's régime as general officer commanding has been characterised by acts of clemency and mercy in the disposal of court-martial prisoners, more especially in cases where the lesser punishments were considered to have a more deterrent effect than long terms of imprisonment,—such cases have invariably had his best attention. No soldier who expressed deep contrition for his faults appealed to his clemency in vain."

The Daily News says:—"Under instructions from the Horse Guards, War Office, it has been notified that as no forfeiture of service towards pension and good-conduct pay is incurred by Militiamen who, since July 25, 1879, have enlisted into the Army without first obtaining their discharge from the Auxiliary Forces, his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, with the concurrence of the Secretary of State, has been pleased to approve of the probationary period of five years required by paras. 99 and 101, sec. 19., Queen's Regulations and Orders for the Army, for the restoration of service, shall be dispensed with in the case of men who forfeited service by fraudulent enlistment from the Militia prior to the passing of the Army Discipline and Regulation Act, 1879, and to decide that they shall be restored to the benefit of their forfeited service without any further probation. The service of men in this position will be recredited to them from March 31, 1884, and the necessary entries made in their records of service; the number and date of Horse Guards authority, as above, to be quoted in each case as the authority for the restoration."

Headaches and Disordered Stomach.—"After suffering for nearly two-and-a-half years from severe headache and disordered stomach, and after trying almost everything, and spending much money without finding any benefit, I was recommended to try your Fruit Salt. Before I had finished one bottle, I found it doing me a great deal of good, and now I am restored to my usual health. Others I know that have tried it have not enjoyed such good health for years.—Yours truly, Robert Humphreys, Post Office, Barrasford." CAUTION.—Legal rights are protected in every civilised country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed upon by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. MORTALITY IN THE MERCHANT SERVICE.

The rate of mortality in the British Mercantile Marine is a subject which has especial interest at the present time. Attention has been called to the unsatisfactory nature of the materials which now exist for the calculation of such a death-rate. The Parliamentary return annully furnished by the Registrar-General of Shipping and Seamen is made up from a return of "accounts of wages and effects of seamen (exclusive of masters) dying before the termination of the voyage received by the Board of Trade." The return includes the deaths of most seamen who die ashore in foreign countries after being discharged from their ships, but does not include the deaths occurring in the United Kingdom after discharge. The causes of death, moreover, which are in the Parliamentary return classed under thirty-nine headings, are for the most part assigned by the masters of the vessels; their value for statistical purposes could not, therefore, be easily underrated. As regards the death-rate from all causes, calculated upon a strength which varied during the four years 1879-82 between 192,903 and 195,937, it was 19·0 per 1,000 in 1879, and has since increased to 21·2 in 1880, 23·1 in 1881, and 23·8 in 1882. From the nature of the service, which necessitates a certain selection of men at the commencement of each voyage, and which loses sight of those whose health will not allow of re-engagement, it is patent that no materials exist for the calculation of a death-rate that can be compared with the death-rate of landsmen. With regard to the mortality from violence, including drowning and other forms of accidental deaths, the facts given are probably more trustworthy. The return alluded to shows that 3,453, or nearly 75 per cent., of the 4,659 deaths from all causes in 1882 were the result of violence; the deaths from violent causes were 2,945 in 1880, and 3,178 in 1881, showing a steady increase during these three years. These deaths included 2,654 from drowning in 1880, 2,905 in 1881, and 3,167 in 1882. From the Board of Trade Statistical Abstract it appears that in 1878, 1 seaman in 156 was lost by wreck, or otherwise, from vessels belonging to the United Kingdom; this ratio of loss increased to 1 in 134 in 1879, 1 in 98 in 1880, and further to 1 in 66 in 1881, and 1 in 61 in 1882. That this steady increase of the loss of life by drowning in the Merchant Service calls for investigation, few will venture to deny, und most will agree with the Social Science Association, that the unsatisfactory returns of the causes of death at sea afford dangerous facility for the concealment of gross negligence or worse, which, had it occurred on land, would almost inevitably be the subject of inquiry before a coroner. It is not so easy to provide a remedy for the present evil. The satisfactory medical registration of causes of death at sea, in the absence both of the body and of any medical evidence, appears to suggest almost insuperable difficulties. There does not, however, appear to be the same difficulty in the way of an inquiry into the circumstances attending all deaths occurring during a voyage, to be held before the crew is paid off. There can be no question that some such form of inquiry should be devised with a view to diminish the present high rate of mortality in the British Mercantile Marine.—Lancet.

UNPOPULAR MEASURES IN THE NAVY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—It would be interesting to know what sum the Government save by the stoppage of what is known in the Navy as optional cocoa, i.e., an extra allowance for the men coming on deck during the middle and morning watches. Those only who have served at sea in all climates are aware what a boon this is to the men, how conducive to their health, and how small the cost. Most people, whether on shore or afloat, take a cup of cocoa, tea, or coffee directly they turn out. Who would think of starting on a railway journey on a cold, wet morning without some refreshment, and yet the unfortunate Blue-jacket is expected to rouse out to holystone decks before daylight, or drill aloft, if in the tropics, at 5 a.m., his stomach unfortified by any square meal since noon the day before. This is not the way to make men healthy or contented with their lot; moreover, it is a mistake in a pecuniary sense, as you cannot get the same work out of the men, who thus get sick and require expensive medicines to bring them round, besides the loss of their services in the meantime. Now that the allowance has been stopped by order, the men provide themselves with coffee out of the canteen fund in many ships, and those commanding officers who concern themselves as to the health of their ship's companies will do well to encourage this; but I should have thought that the country could have stood this strain without damage, and apprehend that such a trifling outlay would sink into insignificance, besides such items (of vastly more importance, no doubt) as the coal-bill for the Enchantress to Malta and back; the gilding of the Royal yachts, and the millions that are lavished upon the Inflexible, and such like atrocities of the present day. The opinion probably prevails that our Blue-jackets are very well fed, and so they are as regards quantity; it is the distribution that is at fault. They get one good meal in the middle of the day, and slops at morning and evening, so that, as a matter of fact, they are supposed to gorge themselves at dinner-time to last the 24 hours like a dog. If the full allowance were put into a trough and stirred up together, I doubt if a man could "get outside it." A more substantial breakfast and supper would be a step in the right direction. I doubt if two more unpopular measures have ever been taken than the stoppage of officers' grog and the men's optional cocoa.—I am, &c.,

London Amusements.

Although many novelties will be produced this Easter, most of the West-End theatres will retain their present attractions.

At the Haymarket will be retained "Peril," which has been running since Christmas. The Princess's keeps in its programme "Claudian," already acted 130 times. The Adelphi has "In the Ranks," now having passed its 160th representation. The St. James's continues "A Scrap of Paper," which has proved for several months an attractive revival. The Strand has "My Sweetheart," here played by Miss Minnie Palmer 114 times. Lotta prolongs at the Opera Comique a prosperous career, already of 16 weeks' duration. At the Vaudeville will be still found "Confusion," now on the verge of its 300th performance. At the Comedy will be repeated "Falka," for the 152nd time. At Toole's will be seen the merry travesty of "Claudian," now going more briskly than ever after 50 performances; and at the Savoy will remain "The Princess Ida," which has continued to draw good houses since last November.

Notwithstanding considerable alterations and excisions, Mr. R. Reece's version of "La Belle Hélène," produced at the Gaiety on Monday evening, under the title of "Our Helen," the burlesque three-act opera has not recovered from the damaging effects of a first night's condemnation. It will probably be reduced to a one-act after-piece, preceded by the farcical comedy of "The Rocket." Neither the vivacity of Miss E. Farren as Helen, nor the drollery of Mr. E. Terry as Paris, would be sufficient to save any operatic burlesque which is without point or plot, and is oppressed by dreary music-hall tunes, injudiciously substituted for the lively strains of Offenbach.

On Tuesday afternoon, there was to be seen at Toole's Theatre a merry assemblage of actors and actresses, courteously invited by the popular lessee, to witness a performance of the admirable travesty of "Claudian." Mr. Toole's mysterious transformation into a grotesque likeness of Mr. Wilson Barrett is a triumph of stage artifice. The audience, entirely composed of members of the theatrical profession, laughed almost incessantly during the hour and a half occupied by the performance, and the mirth and applause of Mr. Wilson Barrett and the representatives of the Princess's company afforded convincing proof of the friendly spirit in which this clever dramatic caricature was viewed by those so amusingly burlesqued.

The Carl Rosa season of English opera at Drury Lane commences on Easter Monday, and will continue four weeks. The first performance will be Balfe's "Bohemian Girl," with Madame Georgina Burns as Arline, and that accomplished tenor, Mr. Joseph Maas, as Thaddeus. This will be followed, on Tuesday, by Bizet's "Carmen," with Madame Marie Roze and Mr. Barton McGuckin. For the remainder of the week are announced Wallace's "Maritana," Mackenzie's "Colomba," Ambroise Thomas's "Mignon," and Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor." MM. Randegger and Goosens are the conductors, and Mr. Carrodus will lead a band of 60 instrumentalists. Mr. Augustus Harris has undertaken the entire arrangement of the mise-en-scène.

This (Saturday) evening, Mr. Lawrence Barrett will make his first appearance in England at the Lyceum, in a three-act drama, called "Yorick's Love." The Royalty will be opened by Miss Kate Santley, with an English version of Hervé's comic opera of "La Cosaque;" and the Alhambra reopens, at reduced prices, with an English version, by Mr. Beatty Kingston, of Millocker's German comic opera of "The Beggar Student."

Obituary.

Gen. J. Travers, C.B., V.C., Bengal Army, who died on the 1st inst. at Pallanza, Lake Maggiore, was third son of the late Major-Gen. Sir R. Travers, entered the Bengal Army in 1838, and served throughout the campaigns of 1840-42 in Afghanistan, partly with his own regiment, the 2nd Bengal Grenadiers, and partly with Skinner's Horse, the present 1st Cavalry. He was at the recapture of Ghuznee, served in the Sutlej campaign in 1846, and commanded the Nusseeree Goorkha Battalion at Sobraon, and also the cavalry of the Bhopal Contingent in the defeat of insurgents at Kullea Karee. He commanded the same contingent against Shunker Sing in 1856 (thanks of Government). He received the Victoria Cross "for a daring act of bravery when the Indore Residency was suddenly attacked by Holkar's troops, in having charged the guns with only five men to support him, and driven the gunners from the guns, which saved the lives of many persons, fugitives to the Residency. His horse was shot in three places, and his accoutrements were shot through in various parts." He attained the rank of col. in 1856, major-gen. in 1865, lieut.-gen. in 1873, and gen. in 1877. He was for some time employed in political duties in India, and commanded the Meerut Division from 1869 to 1873. A very gallant, intelligent, and able officer, with a wide circle of friends.

Lieut.-Col. William R. Jeffreys, R.M.L.I., has died at Twickenham, aged 55 years. Col. Jeffreys served in the Baltic during the Russian war, and was present at the attack and surrender of the forts of Bomarsund, 1854 (medal). Present during the operations before Sebastopol, and in action with the outer forts on June 17, 1855. Was also at the occupation of Kertch and Yeni-Kalé and at the surrender of Kinburn (medal and clasp and Turkish medal). He retired in August, 1873, and his death does not, therefore, give a step in the corps.

Army & Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 12, 1884.

THE second part of the lecture or paper on Imperial Defences, read by Sir Charles Nugent on April 4 at the Royal United Service Institution, contained an exhaustive examination of the measures which, in the opinion of the Engineer Colonel, are required to ensure the defences of our foreign possessions and the safety of Great Britain, whilst her sea-going Fleet is left full freedom of action for the protection of our commerce and the maintenance of the independence of our Colonies. The old and favourite remedy of bottling up foreign fleets in their own harbours is, of course, now impracticable and obsolete; and indeed, at the best of times, it was always uncertain, for we never could prevent the Dutch getting out of the Scheldt, or the Amstel, the French emerging from Brest or Toulon, or the Americans from covering the seas with their predatory cruisers when the conditions were much more favourable for the establishment of strict blockade than they are at present. It would be impossible to give at length in a newspaper even a summary of the interesting paper prepared by Sir Charles Nugent; but that is of less consequence to our readers, because they can obtain at the Institution and in the report of the "Proceedings" of that excellent establishment, the ipsissima verba of the document, and of the discussions which followed the reading of it. The conditions of our people in relation to food have so much altered of late years, that starvation would stare us in the face were our communications with the countries from which we import supplies to be cut or seriously interrupted; and the cry would be to let in foreign cattle, foot-and-mouth disease and all, rather than to keep them out, were we obliged to look to the British farmer for the support of the British nation. No military man whose opinion is entitled to respect, in considering the measures which this country would have to adopt in the face of a war with any great Power, or combination of European countries, has the smallest hesitation in admitting the enormous magnitude of the Naval ingredient in the system of defence. In fact, there is no system possible, which does not rest upon the basis of Naval efficiency and on a predominancy, which will secure us from attack by any foreign enemy landing on our coasts, and against the severance of the great lines of communication by which we receive our food. We must abandon ubiquity as far as the Fleet is concerned. But Sir Charles Nugent, who shares the opinion of Lord Wolseley and of other eminent soldiers, that the first consideration of an English statesman should be the assurance of our Naval superiority against possible combinations of the Naval Powers, points out that "mobility" is the nearest approach we can make to obtaining the advantages to be derived from the presence of British men-of-war in superior numbers at any point that might be exposed to attack. Mobility is to be obtained by providing fast ships, with sufficient supplies of the best coal, placed in convenient positions and protected by suitable defences. These coaling stations should be, in fact, naval intrenched camps, some in mid-ocean, or in islands of the sea, as at Malta, Bermuda, and Hong Kong; others strategical bases for our fleets, like Halifax, Trincomalee, and Simon's Bay. The sooner we set about the creation of these points d'appui for our Navy, the better. But is it likely that we shall, under any possible administration, have any attempt made to solve this great problem of imperial defence at home and abroad, unless we do it under pressure, and almost under the guns of an enemy? Year after year, soldiers and sailors deliver themselves of their fears and their apprehensions and their theories—some in a loud continuous wail, like to Sir Thomas Symonds, Admiral of the Fleet, whose weakly Jeremiads do not produce the effect of softening the stony heart of the Admiralty, as water wears away the rock; others, like General Collinson, Sir Lintorn Simmons, or the writer of the present paper, in energetic, eloquent, and scientific demonstrations of the dangers of our present thriftless, happy-go-lucky, and poco curante attitude. We are like men who, in the language of the Psalmist, heapeth up riches, and cannot tell who may gather them, though we do not, indeed, "disquiet ourselves in vain." It is supposed that everything will come right in the end, that we are so good to our dependents, affable to our neighbours, and harmless all round, that there is a common consensus amongst all the aggressive powers of the world to leave us alone; and that therefore we need take no thought for the morrow, what we shall eat or what we shall drink. For us, all history seems to have been written in vain. It is little more than a hundred years since the battle of Plassey laid the foundation of our Indian Empire. For hundreds and hundreds of years before that, dynasties endured, each of which, in its time, considered it was the end-all of government, the sole durable dominion founded on the continent of Hindostan. Within ten years of the same date, we had lost our great colonies on the American continent, which at the time, to some of our most far-seeing statesmen, appeared to be a fatal blow to our Imperial career. But, reversing the figure of Canning, we found in the East the means of redressing our losses in the West, and our recent policy has been directed, not so much to the nurturing of our Anglo-Saxon Colonies, as to the maintenance of our hold upon India. It is in the direction of Hindostan that our best interests are most likely to be attacked in a vulnerable point. Fleets cannot protect us, and armies would be of little avail, if behind the frontier guarded by a quarter of a million of soldiers there were two hundred and fifty millions of hostile population, and in front the whole weight of the Russian Empire, corroborated by the vast hordes of Central Asia, over which it is acquiring sway. These are serious considerations. We heartily commend the lecture of Colonel Nugent—not to our readers, for there is no use to preach to the converted—but to the members of the infatuated Peace Society which finds allies in the House of Commons, to Manchester millionaires, and Birmingham manufacturers, and all the swarms of peace-mongering, money-making merchants, who deem that all the world is made for their pleasure-ground, and that though there is no strong man to guard the house, they can fill their money-boxes in security in this new heaven and earth, where there are no thieves to break through and steal.

The Military Secretary will not hold a levée on Tuesday, the 15th inst.

The Select Committee of the House of Commons on the Commissariat and Transport services in the Egyptian Campaign, moved for by Dr. Cameron, will assemble after Easter. It will consist of Mr. Brand, Colonel Milne Home, Colonel Stanley, Mr. Carrington, Mr. Dawnay, Mr. Brown, Mr. Jackson, Colonel Kingscote, Sir Henry Fletcher, Lord Edward Cavendish, Colonel Nolan, Mr. Earp, Mr. Herbert, and Dr. Cameron.

Colonel W. T. Goldsworthy, on the active half-pay list, who was for five years Assistant-Adjutant-General of the Cork District, which position he vacated in July, 1880, has finally decided to contest Bodmin in the Conservative interest at the next General Election. The addition of a practical soldier with recent Staff experience would be a great gain to the House, and we trust, therefore, that Colonel Goldsworthy's candidature may be a successful one.

We believe that the Colonial Office, recognising the excellent work performed under circumstances of exceptional difficulty by Major-General R. G. A. Luard in Canada, will confer upon that officer the order of St. Michael and St. George.

There are two Infantry Colonelcies now vacant, those of the 24th South Wales Borderers and 27th Inniskilling Fusiliers. General Pringle Taylor had held the former appointment for a period of twenty-two-and-a-half years.

The Indian Staff Corps had a long death roll last month, when the deaths of twelve officers were officially reported, viz., one Lieutenant-General, one Major-General, two Colonels, two Lieutenant-Colonels, one Major, one Captain, and four Lieutenants. Of these, all but one were Bengal officers.

The many friends of Sir Francis de Winton, who has left with Lieutenant-Colonel Hart for his arduous post upon the Congo, must feel some regret and anxiety that he should have undertaken such a very difficult position, but at the same time they are assured that if such tact, intelligence, ability, and industry will enable any one to successfully manage the affairs which the King of the Belgians has consented to transfer from Mr. Hawley to an English officer, it will be Sir Francis, who has shown during his long connection with the Staff in Canada, qualities that have endeared him to all those with whom he has been brought into official communication, and have won for him golden opinions from all classes of men.

We regret to learn from Cairo that Baker Pasha is suffering much from the effects of his wound, and that exfoliation has taken place, small pieces of bone coming out where he was struck by the shrapnel. However, according to the last account, his health was improving, although he was still under orders to refrain from any exciting work, or to take active part in affairs.

Lord Ashford will, after Easter, call attention to the present condition of the Army, and the system of recruiting; and also to the recommendations of the Committee of Military officers presided over by Lord Airey embodied in their Report of March, 1880. It would be as well to add—between official statements and facts.

Captain G. Fraser, Quartermaster on the Retired List, has been granted a Good-Service Pension of £50 per annum.

Colonel O. H. A. Nicolls, from the District Staff at Woolwich, has succeeded Colonel G. B. Traill as Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General on the Staff in Ireland. Colonel G. B. Traill has taken up the duties of his new appointment as Assistant-Adjutant-General at the Horse Guards, vice Colonel H. Le G. Geary.

Lieutenant-Colonel W. H. Noble, Royal Artillery, has been placed on the District Staff at Woolwich, vice Colonel Nicolls.

Lieutenant-Colonel S. J. Nicholson, Royal Artillery, Assistant to the Director of Artillery and Stores, has been selected to succeed Lieutenant-Colonel W. H. Noble, Royal Artillery, as a member of the Ordnance Committee at the War Office.

We understand that Colonel Sir Redvers Buller, on return from Egypt, will resume the duties of his appointment at the Horse Guards.

Lieutenant-Colonel C. W. B. Bell, half-pay, late 8th Hussars, joined the Intelligence Department on the 1st inst. as Deputy-Assistant-Quartermaster-General, in relief of Major L. M. Carmichael, 5th Lancers.

We understand that Colonel Sir Charles Nugent vacates his seat on the Ordnance Committee at the War Office.

Major P. J. Hughes, 26th Cameronians, accompanies Major-General F. A. Willis to York as A.D.C.

Colonel F. D. Walters, half-pay, took up the duties of his appointment as Recruiting Officer at Liverpool on the 1st inst. Colonel Walters is to be included on the Staff establishment of the Northern District, as an Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General.

Colonel J. B. Edwards, C.B., Royal Engineers, has succeeded Colonel E. L. Bland as Commanding R E., Northern District, Colonel Bland being transferred to Colchester, where he has relieved Colonel J. Y. Moggridge.

On return from Egypt, Colonel Herbert Stewart, 3rd Dragoon Guards, will resume the duties of Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General at Dover, which are being carried out in his absence by Major C. J. Wyndham, 83rd Royal Irish Rifles, unless he be promoted Major-General as some day he will.

Major R. A. Hickson, 3rd Buffs, accompanies Major-General Mark Walker to Gibraltar as A.D.C.

Major T. S. Gildea, 72nd Seaforth Highlanders, has taken up the duties of Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General for Musketry, at York, on transfer from Gibraltar, where he has been for the last four years employed in a similar capacity.

With reference to a letter which appeared in our last issue respecting the amount of retired pay to which a half-pay Major is entitled after being three years unemployed, we think it may be of interest to many of our readers, including "G. W. H. C.," the writer of the letter, to be put in possession of the exact state of the case. Article 972 of the Royal Warrant of March 11, 1882, says a Major "permitted to retire from our Army shall receive upon retirement retired pay according to the following scale:—After 20 years' service, or at the age of 40 or upwards, retired pay of £200 a year; after 23 years' service, retired pay of £250 a year." Now, as many half-pay Majors have, on completion of three years' non-employment, over 23 years' "service," the question simply resolves itself into what is the meaning of the word "service," as used in Article 982. And, unfortunately for the hopes of "G. W. H. C.," he will, on turning to the preamble of the Warrant, find on page xiv. that the meaning is only too clear,—"The term service shall in all cases be held to mean full-pay service, unless it be otherwise specified." Thus, although it may possibly be 23 years since a Major who retires "after being unemployed for three years continuously" first entered the Army, he, having passed three years of that time on half-pay, can only claim the rate of retired pay allowed for 20 years' full-pay service, viz., £200 a year.

Colonel F. D. Middleton, Commandant and Secretary of the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, has accepted the command of the Canadian Militia, vice Major-General Luard, and will proceed to Ottawa immediately to assume his new duties, with the rank of Major-General. He will be much missed at Sandhurst, where he has earned the respect and gratitude of everybody, the thoroughness with which he has carried out the duties of his by no means sinecure appointment having done much to raise the general tone of the establishment, and overcome the difficulties which might have arisen, but for the presence of so experienced and capable an officer always at the Governor's right hand. It would have been impossible to have found a more worthy successor to General Luard, and if Colonel Middleton does not continue the good work commenced by Sir Edward Selby Smyth, and continued by General Luard, it will be due to a want of official encouragement on the part of the Canadian Government, and not to any lack of zeal on his part.

THE CHANNEL SQUADRON.

Suda Bay, Crete, Monday, March 31.

The Forward rejoined us on Monday last, the 24th, with all our back mails from Syra and the Piræus, and next day we left Marmarice. We weighed at 9 a.m., and went out in single column line ahead, formed columns of divisions as soon as we were clear of the land, and stood over to Rhodes, where we arrived, and anchored off the town, at half-past one. Shortly before anchoring, the rear ship of each division, the Sultan and Achilles, were signalled to take station on the outer quarter of their respective leaders. This brought the squadron into two lines, the leading one formed by the two flagships in line abreast, and the rear one by the other four ships, also in line abreast, a very picturesque formation, in which we stood in and came-to. After a few hours, in which officers were able to have a run on shore, and messmen to lay in a stock of fruit, vegetables, &c., of which there is always an abundant supply at Rhodes, we weighed, and rounded Molino Point, the northern point of the island of Rhodes, in single column line ahead. We afterwards formed columns of divisions, and came straight on here. We arrived at 9 o'clock on Thursday forenoon, the 27th, and found H.M.S. Alexandra still at anchor here. Directly after anchoring we hoisted out, and manned and armed boats. In the afternoon it came on to blow, and we let go a second anchor, and struck lower yards and topmasts; it blew very hard for an hour or two, but the wind went down in the evening, so we weighed the second anchor, and next morning, at 8 o'clock, crossed royal yards again. The Achilles dragged a good deal, and got rather close to the Northumberland; so she had to get under weigh and shift berth. On Saturday morning a collier arrived, and in the afternoon the Tyne came in; we have since been coaling and provisioning with all expedition; the coaling has been carried on all through the nights, and is now finished. The six ships have been coaled in just two days. Capt. Britten, the new flag captain, came in the Tyne, and Capt. Fellowes is going home in her. The sad news of the death of the Duke of Albany reached us on Friday night; since then the colours have been half-masted, and the flagships have carried the Royal Standard at the main half-mast high. We leave for Salamis Bay and the Piræus to-morrow morning.

The Times of Thursday, under the heading of "Machine Shell-Guns for the Navy," published the following article:—"Nordenfelt machine-guns have long become a service fitting. All the new ships have been provided with them, and the whole of the old vessels, including the Coastguard ships, are being supplied with them as they are brought forward at the various dockyards for recommission. But it is now proposed to introduce a Nordenfelt machine shell-gun into our men-of-war, and a long series of experiments has just been concluded at Portsmouth with a view of ascertaining the value of the weapon and its suitability for boat service. As these were the first trials of the kind, the results are of great importance. The 1½-in. gun, firing a shell of about 2 lb. weight, and having an initial velocity of 1,770 ft., was proved to penetrate at 300 yards range a solid steel plate of 2 in. in thickness, the shot protruding half its length beyond the surface of the plate. The shells fired from this gun against a thinner plate burst in penetrating it, and spread more than 30 splinters over a screen placed behind it for the purpose of recording the effect of exploded shells. The accuracy of the gun was also especially good. The new 6-pounder Nordenfelt gun, of which 100 are included in the Estimates for the current year, was mounted in launch No. 110, one of the lightest steam craft used in the Navy with the object of securing great speed. The purpose was to ascertain whether the gun, with its high initial velocity of 1,870 ft. per second, could be fired from the boat without straining it. A number of rounds were consequently first fired with a reduced charge, and when it was found that the boat was quite strong enough to withstand the concussion, the full charges were used. The launch was taken out to Spithead, with the gun mounted on the Nordenfelt recoil carriage for such like craft, the same as that from which the gun had been fired throughout the autumn at Shoeburyness. A number of shots were first discharged singly, the boat being carefully inspected inside and out after each round. A series of six rounds was subsequently fired rapidly. The first six rounds, when aimed and fired by one man, were discharged in 21 sec.; the second six rounds, when one man aimed and another fired, were discharged in 22 sec.; and the third series, when one man fired continuously while the other aimed as well as he could, was discharged in 14 sec. This is equal to a rapidity of fire of respectively 18 and 25 shots per minute. No strain or damage could be detected in the boat, while no jam or hitch of any kind occurred to the gun or ammunition during this spell of rapid firing. The launch was afterwards taken out on a day when the sea was rough, so that it pitched considerably, and a number of rounds were fired without any interference or obstruction in the firing from the movements of the launch. Admiral Hornby, Capt. Hopkins, Capt. Markham, Capt. Fisher, Capt. J. Brown, and the staff of the gunnery-ship attended during the greater part of these interesting experiments."

"It is a wonder," says the Western Morning News, "that some inquisitive Member of Parliament has not, ere this, had his attention directed to the regulations regarding the award of pensions to the widows of naval officers. According to the Admiralty Regulations, their Lordships only grant these pensions to the widows of those officers whose income after their husband's death does not exceed the amount laid down in the confidential scale at the Admiralty as a sufficiency for the widows of naval officers of the different ranks. Why this scale should be confidential, one fails to see, as also why there should be a difference in what their Lordships consider a sufficiency for the relicts of officers of various ranks. Presumably what would be only a pittance for the widow of an admiral, would be luxury for the relict of a surgeon or a lieutenant. While referring to the confidential rules for these awards, which it might be fairly assumed naval officers had a right to expect for their widows, it would seem desirable to endeavour to attract attention to the system which obtains in the service relative to the issue of 'confidential' orders. Whenever the Admiralty desire to issue a general order on any subject connected with the internal economy of her Majesty's ships, the procedure at courts-martial, or any other subject of a similar description, they invariably promulgate it in a confidential disguise. For instance, a short time back, when the growing importance of the steam department rendered it imperatively necessary that chief engineers should have entire control of their own men during working hours, instead of having them withdrawn for considerable portions of the day to assist in carrying out obsolete evolutions with masts and yards on deck, or to 'polish wood and brass work,' the Admiralty, instead of giving a direct and positive order on the subject, contented themselves with issuing a confidential memorandum to officers in command, impressing on them the 'inadvisability' of withdrawing the stokers from the engine-room during working hours. The same thing obtains with regard to nearly the entire procedure of naval courts-martial, every detail of which appears to be regulated by a 'confidential' order. If it were possible to publish all these mysterious communications which emanate from Whitehall for the edification and guidance of officers in command, the British public would possess a clearer understanding as to the manner in which the internal economy of her Majesty's ships is regulated."

A board of officers, consisting of Major-Gen. the Hon. W. H. A. Fielding, commanding the 3rd Infantry Brigade, president; Col. Nicholl, 3rd Batn. Rifle Brigade; and Col. Gildea, 1st Batn. Royal Scots Fusiliers, members, has assembled at Aldershot to report upon a plan for the reconstruction of the North Camp.

Inspector-Gen. of Hospitals and Fleets James N. Dick has reported at the Admiralty his arrival in England, from Malta, on promotion.

LORD LEWISHAM'S MOTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In your leading article in last week's Army and Navy Gazette, on the Marines, you have, no doubt unintentionally, put words into my mouth that I never used. I never referred in any way to officers of Marines being placed under the command of "mere middies," when landed under the Naval Discipline Act. What I did say was to the effect that, "under the Naval Discipline Act and the Admiralty Instructions, Marine officers specially trained at the public expense to perform military duties, were, when landed to perform such duties in the presence of an enemy, placed under the command of Naval officers not so trained, and that an executive Naval officer, under the authority of the Naval Discipline Act, takes command over Marine officers on shore when landed from a ship." There are, as your readers are fully aware, plenty of instances of old and experienced Marine officers trained at the public expense for military command, being placed before an enemy under the command of Naval officers not so trained, and who were, perhaps, in their nurseries when the Marine officers had commissions in her Majesty's service. I may add I do not dispute the necessity for Marine officers being commanded by Naval officers on board ship, and I took particular pains to point this out. I feel very strongly on the subject, and I should be exceedingly sorry if any exaggeration or misrepresentation of mine should prevent the objects I have in view, but I believe, and I am confirmed in my belief, by no notice having been taken to the points referred to by the Secretary to the Admiralty, that my statements were absolutely correct. I must ask you to publish this letter in your next issue.—I am, &c., LEWISHAM.

[Lord Lewisham deserves the best thanks of the corps of Royal Marines for the able manner in which he has advocated their cause. Nothing was further from our thoughts than to, in any way, misrepresent the noble Viscount. We merely quoted from the report of his lordship's speech as it appeared in many daily papers, our object being to assist, and not to impede, the good cause he has so energetically taken in hand. We sincerely hope his lordship will not let the matter rest.—ED. A. & N. G.]

THE NEW ADMIRALTY AND WAR OFFICE BUILDINGS.

The names of the authors of the nine designs which have been selected by the committee appointed to examine the drawings sent in for the first competition for the Admiralty and War Offices have been published. The committee cannot be accused of being dilatory in the discharge of their functions; on the contrary, we can only express a hope that the conclusion come to in so short a period over the merits of such a number of designs as were known to have been sent in has not been based on too hasty an examination. The result seems to confirm the views which have sometimes been advanced in favour of the competitive system, as a means of bringing into prominence unknown merit; and even in regard to those in the list whose abilities are well known, it will certainly be considered matter for surprise that not a single one among those who rank as the leading architects of the day is included in the list. This very unexpected result certainly tends to emphasise the feeling which many persons already entertain, that in common justice to the unsuccessful competitors, the first competition designs should be exhibited publicly, both that those who have toiled for nothing may at least have the advantage of public exhibition, and that we may have some chance of understanding how all our leading architects come to be out of the running; unless, indeed, they have all had wisdom granted them from above to shun the snare. There is another point the authorities certainly ought to reconsider,—the time allowed for the complete drawings. A committee may find it easy to go with a light heart through several hundred drawings, but the two architects on the committee ought to know very well, if their colleagues do not, that a complete set of plans for such a building cannot be devised, thought out, and executed by June 24 (the date fixed) without either painful overwork, or hasty and incomplete thought and execution. The time ought to be extended, if justice is to be done to the building and to the architects.—Builder.

UNSEAWORTHY SHIPS.

Mr. Martell did real and good service several years ago, when he explained that a certain class of ships had come into existence which he characterised as "rectangular prisms." It had become patent several years ago that such ships were, as regards strength alone, fit to load deeply, but that when loaded with a homogeneous cargo, they had no stability to speak of. Underwriters got wary of that style of ship, and sailors were drowned in it; and a matter of common observation some years ago was that until those "rectangular prisms" had disappeared, there was not any likelihood that the number of missing ships would greatly decrease. Some of them have yet to disappear; and disappear they will in due course, unless the action of the Registry Society, or the Load-line Committee, or the Board of Trade, should intervene; or unless the dissemination of knowledge similar to that propounded in the Daphne and Austral reports, and other scientific publications, should dispel and supplant the "ignorance" at present "enjoyed" by those who own, load, and navigate ships. We use the word "enjoyed" advisedly, on the grounds that ignorance has, as our readers are well aware, been "bliss" to persons whose ships have found their way to sea in an unseaworthy condition.—Nautical Magazine.

THE AFGHAN WAR RELIEF FUND.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Few in this country know how much the people of India have done for the relatives of our soldiers killed during the late Afghan war; and complying with a request made to me from thence by the authorities, I venture to ask your insertion of the following short statement:—Since closing the fund raised in this country, which amounted to £3,773 18s., I have received from the Indian Patriotic Fund and the Bombay Military Relief Fund the sum of £7,084 8s. 10d. This I have distributed in sums varying from £1 to £25 amongst over 500 widows, orphans, and nearest relatives, mostly aged parents, of those who lost their lives during the war. Besides this sum there has been distributed by the above-named Funds to relatives of European soldiers in India over £15,000. Respecting the amount entrusted to my care for distribution on this side, I should like to say how much I owe to the Staff at the War Office and India Office for their willing co-operation in enabling me to trace those entitled to relief, and to the clergy of the several parishes for their ready help in identifying the recipients and undertaking the trust of the sums which I have been able to apportion to each; without such aid, it would have been impossible satisfactorily to disburse so large an amount. The people of England owe a large debt of gratitude to both Europeans and natives in India for their liberal aid to the relatives of her fallen soldiers.—I am, &c., JAMES GILDEA, Major,

Late Treasurer and Hon Sec. Afghan War Relief Fund.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT & PILLS.—As the seasons change, the climatic variations warn us all to be careful. Most especially is it incumbent on the aged, prone to bronchial attacks, outward ulcerations, and similar debilitating disorders, to have them removed, or worse consequences will follow. These remedies are their sheet-anchors; on their powers all may confidently rely. The Ointment not simply puts their sores out of sight, but extirpates the source of mischief, extracts the corroding poison, and stimulates nature to fill up the ulcer with sound, healthy granulations, that will abide through life. Under this treatment bad legs soon become sound, scorbutic skins cast off their scales, and scrofulous sores cease to annoy. Such hope for the diseased was unknown in former days.

CO-OPERATION.—Thus, as COOPER COOPER and CO. are enabled to send packages containing 6 lb. of any of the Choice TEAS on their List to any place in the United Kingdom for 3d, it follows that if six families in a village are willing to club together, each can have a pound of tea sent for one halfpenny.

CO-OPERATION.—Or, as two parcels containing 6 lb. each can be sent for 6d, six families would be enabled, by joining together in one remittance, to order 2 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA each, at a cost of one penny only, in addition to the price of the tea.

CO-OPERATION.—This system will apply to every kind of TEA offered for Sale by COOPER COOPER and CO., and if followed out will practically enable them to place before customers in every county town and village in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, in the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man, in the Hebrides, and the Orkneys, Tea of the same choice kinds as sold in their various Establishments in London, at the same prices, with the addition of the nominal sum of one halfpenny a pound.

THE Easter of 1884 promises to prove an important epoch in the history of the Volunteer Force. It is a quarter of a century since the Volunteer movement first sprang into existence. Encouraged at the outset, as affording proof of the vitality of the nation, our citizen soldiers fell after a time into some measure of disrepute. They were organised in a moment of national excitement, as a safeguard against a reported invasion. But the crisis passed, and no sooner had the alarm subsided than the people lost interest in their new toy, and when once the novelty wore off it was difficult to rekindle an enthusiasm. "The French are not coming," it was said, "why should we encourage an institution which we only recognised as supplying a temporary want?" Few believed that the martial spirit, created by reports of a possible invasion of our shores, had taken so deep a root as to justify the supposition that it would outlive the reaction which had set in, and which manifested itself in many ways, in none more so than in the ridicule heaped upon it in the comic prints. And so it happened that the Volunteer chiefs found themselves compelled at length to apply to the War Office for substantial assistance, to enable them to place the organisation, which they had been instrumental in creating, on a fairly sound basis. This official encouragement was not withheld. It did not, it is true, take a very distinct form at first. Still, it enabled the citizen soldiers to overcome momentary difficulties, and keep themselves going. For some eight years, the Volunteers may be said to have lived from hand to mouth. Many of the originators of the movement held on, but the majority lost heart. When our citizen defenders appeared in public, they were invariably subjected to indignity, they were made the object of street-boys' harmless, but no less cutting chaff, and they were continually twitted by Army men as being, after all, only "playing at soldiers." But through good report and bad report the Force has lived, and not only lived, but grown and extended itself, until almost every British dependancy of any importance can now boast its Volunteer organisation in one form or another. The first steps taken to raise the tone of the service were those adopted by Lord Cardwell in 1870, when he decided to introduce a system of examination for all officers and serjeants, and to open Schools of Instruction in London and elsewhere, which those officers could attend who desired to undergo a practical course of parade-drill and musketry. From the date of the introduction of this system of examination, February 1, 1871, the Volunteers have steadily advanced. It was thought at the outset that the attempts to introduce a compulsory test of efficiency would be resisted; but far from this being the case, officers and non-commissioned officers hailed with delight the opportunity thus afforded them of showing their fitness for the duties they had assumed. The next innovation was the formation of Provisional Battalions of Volunteers for employment during the Autumn Manœuvres. Here, again, the Volunteers readily complied with the wishes of their official superiors. It was pointed out to them that when assembled with Regular troops they would be under martial law, and liable to all the pains and penalties of the Line soldier for any breach of discipline. But this, instead of deterring men, as some expected it would do, from coming forward, only had the effect of rendering the "Aldershot week" more popular. Indeed, the great difficulty the War Office has experienced of late years has been to keep the martial aspirations of the more zealous of the Volunteers within reasonable bounds, fearing lest, by allowing them to have too full play, expenses would be incurred which, in the present state of public feeling, the Treasury would not care to sanction. To their credit be it said, the Volunteers have gone on improving. They hammered so persistently at the doors of the War Office, that the officials of that Department, though they tried for a long time to ignore them, were compelled eventually to admit them within the sacred precincts; and, having once passed the threshold, they have refused to be put off with excuses. They have simply made themselves what they are by their own exertions, and they may be pointed to now as evidence of what can be done by those who set themselves a task, with the full determination of accomplishing it. No stronger proof of the stability of the Volunteer edifice could be furnished than the newspaper accounts of the operations which commenced on Good Friday, and terminated at Portsmouth, Dover, Aldershot, and Sheerness on Monday last. The whole arrangements for the Easter outing were this year of a novel character. It was the first time that the Military authorities had shown their hands. Hitherto, it had been left with the Metropolitan commanding officers to formulate their own plans, and the Horse Guards had done their best to meet their wishes. This year, however, the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, actuated by a desire to raise the tone of the Easter gathering, suggested that it should no longer take the form of a seaside picnic, but be made of real practical value, by being carried out in stricter conformity with the principles and usages of warfare. Though recognising the good services which have been rendered to the Force by the Duke of Cambridge, there were many who were disposed to question the wisdom of his Royal Highness's interference. "The military operations," these people argued, "are of second-rate importance; what the Volunteers want is a few days' relaxation and a blow of sea air." We have all along maintained that this was an erroneous view. We hold that men who will make the sacrifices that Volunteers do from pure love of soldiering do not want to be coddled. What they require is to be treated as soldiers, and to be given every opportunity of acquiring a knowledge of their duties as such. The spirit with which all ranks entered into the work of the marching columns, and carried out the instructions of superiors, and the thoroughness with which the discipline of those corps which occupied quarters at Dover and Portsmouth was maintained, furnish the best possible proof that those are right who hold that Volunteers generally have a higher aim and object than wearing a soldier's tunic and carrying a "gun." The special correspondents who accompanied the troops throughout the operations, speak of their general bearing and behaviour in high terms of praise. There were faults of course,—many grave faults, but we must not expect too much all at once. It was contended years ago that the Volunteers never would, and, from the nature of their service, never could, be brought to understand the importance, not to say necessity, of discipline in an armed force. But this difficulty has apparently been removed. It speaks highly for the intelligence of the rank and file that they should have set themselves to work to remove what was unquestionably a very great blot in the organisation. Soldierly smartness, and machine-like drill and manœuvring, are things that come with practice. The first thing to be considered in dealing with a force like the Volunteers is,—Is it disciplined? Those who went down to Dover and Portsmouth for the Easter Manœuvres were, no doubt, fair specimens of the material of which the rank and file is composed. They, from all accounts, bore themselves like soldiers. Major-General Newdigate, in his District Order, promulgated at Dover on Monday evening, is most eulogistic in his remarks; whilst the special correspondent of the Times, at Portsmouth, says,—"An officer of the Adjutant-General's Department tells me that they [the Volunteers] have behaved admirably, and that not a single complaint has been made by its police." This is very creditable, the more so when it is considered that the men were, for the most part, clerks, shopmen, and respectable artisans, let loose for a few days from counting-houses, shops, and workshops. As we say, there were many mistakes made, both in the disposition and handling of the troops, but what stood out in bolder relief than anything, was the respectful demeanour of the great bulk of the Volunteers to all officers in uniform, and to their own officers out of uniform, and the cheerfulness and soldierly efficiency of the whole Force.

"LITTLE wars" are demoralising,—that is to say, "little wars" lower the moral of an army. Not only that,—"Little wars" are apt to degrade the national sentiment. By the very force of the term, contests to which it applies must be waged between the troops of a civilised nation and a savage enemy. Under no circumstances could any European Power be engaged with another European Power in a little war. No State is so likely, by reason of the conditions of her Empire, to have little wars as Great Britain; but France has had little wars in Algeria, Syria, Tunis, Mexico, Madagascar, and Tonquin. Austria has had little wars in Bosnia and the Herzegovina; Russia has had little wars in Turcomania; Turkey has had them in Arabia and Asia Minor; and Spain has had them in Morocco in the latter part of this century; our own annals bristle with Kaffir wars, wars in New Zealand, on the West Coast, and in South Africa, Abyssinia, Afghanistan, Egypt, the Soudan, &c., which render the history of the reign of Queen Victoria, in brief, something like the Book of Kings, the Chronicles, or the Annals of the Four Masters. There may be some training for Generals, some good lessons for troops, derived from the more arduous of the expeditions undertaken by civilised nations against warlike races in difficult countries, but generally the result is prejudicial to high military qualities. A notable example of the mischievous influence of little wars was afforded by the French Army in Algiers. Discipline was relaxed, fantastic formations and theatrical campaigning destroyed the tone of the troops. The feats and tricks of "Zouaverie" replaced the wholesome practices of warfare. There were cruel butcheries; there were melodramatic Generals—men of feathers and bournouses, like Murats gone mad—and Paris exulted over the inflation of these military balloons, and thought there were no soldiers like Turcos and Zouaves, no Generals like Bourbaki and Forey, Failly and Bazaine,—men who were later doomed to pass through the Caudine

Forks. But it was the soldiery who suffered most in character and who were most deteriorated in military aptitudes. The rewards which were conferred by Louis Philippe and Napoleon on Algerine Generals were, as compared with the honours conferred on those who fought in the Crimea and Italy, greatly disproportionate. The Austrians, always troubled about their frontiers and dealing with Italian émeutes, were found to be unable to cope with Hungarian insurgents, and were accused of great excesses in the suppression of the national rising in 1848. Nor was their moral improved by their experiences against the Danes in 1864, as was shown two years later. We remember how loud was the outcry in Germany and in England against the Russians for their alleged excesses and the slaughter of the Turcomans in their Central-Asian campaigns, and it is a curious fact that some of the regiments which least distinguished themselves in the last war with Turkey formed part of the force which then marched to Khiva. Similarly reproaches were addressed by certain of the German and many foreign newspapers to the English troops for their conduct to the wounded Egyptians at Tel-el-Kebir; and the recent terrible chastisement of Osman Digna's Arabs has not failed to invite invective, and worse, which have not been disarmed by the fact that "our one wounded Arab" who died in hospital at Suakim must have given much trouble in transporting him there from Tamai. The mischief thus done would be very serious in case of war with a civilised power, if there were not a corrective in the laws and usages of war, and the fear of reprisals; but there is a greater mischief arising out of the triumphs of a nation in its little wars, which cannot be so readily set right and cured. There is the estimate formed of the Generals who are hoisted aloft on the backs of the Gazette-writers as Heaven-born geniuses, compeers of the best soldiers of all time, and who naturally exalt each other's deeds, as occasion arises, till the country is in a fool's paradise which can only be broken into by such a stroke as that which fell at Sedan and at Metz on France. It is deplorable, pitiable, and alarming to read speeches and writings, in which men of admirable service, admitted military ability, and varied experience of little wars, speak and write of the recent conflicts with a miserable rabble of savages, armed with swords and spears, as if these bloody affrays were the most glorious and tremendous encounters which ever tried the discipline, steadiness, and valour of the magnificent infantry which carried its colours (as long as it had any) against the most famous soldiery of the world. That is the worst and most dangerous sort of chauvinisme, and the evil of it is all the greater, because it not only magnifies most ridiculously success in such encounters with mere barbarians—brave as they may be, and are—but because it teaches the people to look to success alone as the true test of military genius and soldierly qualities. Give praise, and such praise as is due, where praise is due, without depreciation of the great deeds of our Army in the past, or without absurd comparisons between the heroic battles of the historical epoch of our nation with the razzias of expeditionary columns on naked savages and barbarian chiefs. No one can undervalue the military skill which presided over the bloodless march of Napier from Annesley Bay to Magdala, or the qualities that Wolseley exhibited in the Red River Expedition, in the Coomassie campaign, and in the march to Tel-el-Kebir, which give assurance that in any great war the country could commit with modest confidence its honour and safety to his hands. None can imagine the gallantry of Graham at El Teb and Tamai; or Buller's stiff grasp of the situation when the fanatics were driving Davis's brigade in rout on his lines,—any more than he could fail to recognise the splendid achievements in strategy and tactics of Roberts; or even such vindication of his claims to soldierhood as Chelmsford gave at Ulundi. Among the best work, too, ever done in India must be highly placed Rose's campaign in Central India, the battle of Calpee, and the capture of Gwalior. But these, and all such exploits as these, are not to be ranked with the chefs d'œuvre of generalship and "troop leading" of great Captains, and the records of such feats will not occupy many pages in the history of the world. The confidence which is the offspring of past triumphs should never cause us to neglect every precaution to ensure oueselves against reverses, especially when it is founded largely on recent successes, not without defeats, against undisciplined and unarmed enemies. In small, as in great wars, discipline and courage are needed to secure victory; and clemency—and as far as may be, Christian charity and mercy to the vanquished—are the crowning glory of the conquerors.

SINCE the introduction of the Ram as a weapon of modern warfare, the Army and Navy Gazette has steadfastly advocated the "End-On" system of attack for armour-clads. We have repeatedly pointed out that this mode of attack renders it necessary for ships fitted with rams to be built especially strong about the bows. At the same time, we have advocated rams being strongly armoured forward and aft, so as to be able to deflect the enemy's shot. We can point, year by year, to numerous articles in the back numbers of the Army and Navy Gazette on this all-important question to the Navy. For years our views were rejected by Naval officers as a body. The old "broadside to broadside, yard-arm to yard-arm" system of attacking one's enemy, still retained its hold upon the Naval mind, and at one time it was labour lost to argue against this time-honoured custom. That steam would alter Naval tactics was admitted on all sides, but not until the battle of Lissa was fought, did Naval men begin to comprehend that the prow of the ship, as in the days of the Phœnecian galleys, would have more to do with deciding a Naval combat than would the broadside, be that part of the ship armed as it might be. The introduction of armour still further rendered existing Naval tactics obsolete. Then came the ram. From the moment this weapon was added to those in use, the end-on attack became a necessity. But few men would admit it. The broadside to broadside plan of fighting should then have been relegated to things past and useless. But it was not. Many advocates of this plan of attack and defence still exist among our Naval officers on the Active List; and whereas the French have long since settled this important question, and have built all their modern ships so protected at the bow and stern as to enable them to support a fight at either end, we remain in doubt, and the advocates of the central-citadel ship have been allowed to have it all their own way. Hence all our modern-built armour-clads are weak about the bows, and weaker still at the stern. This places them at a great disadvantage when compared with the modern French ships, for our weak-bowed and open-sterned Inflexible, Alexandra, Ajax, Agamemnon, Conqueror, and others, could not meet the end-on attack of the French ships. But the latter have the advantage in speed, and were we forced to go to war to-morrow, these ships might be forced into action with ships to cope with which they are entirely unsuited. Hence, ship for ship, the French are better adapted for a modern Naval combat than our armour-clads. The modern barbette ship is a sort of compromise between the real ram and the central-citadel ship. And it was only perforce of public opinion that pressure was brought upon the Admiralty to construct these ships. Hence, we have always gladly welcomed converts to our creed, and done our best to support our allies. We were, therefore, in duty bound to render Admiral Sir George Elliot all the assistance we could, after having read his admirable paper on "The Ram—the Prominent Feature of Future Naval Victories," for although he gave the Army and Navy Gazette no credit for having been the first to enunciate the views expressed in his paper, the gallant Admiral therein supported the policy we have ever advocated. But in the letter we this week publish from Admiral Elliot, that officer takes exception to some of the remarks we made when commenting on his manner of dealing with the question. We think, however, that the gallant Admiral has either misread our articles, or that he does not understand us; for he says, "I observe in your leading article of March 22, you argue against the opinion I expressed, that in a running fight, the ship fighting stern-on would necessarily be placed at a great disadvantage." This we certainly did not do; for in dealing with the case of an officer deciding not to meet the end-on attack of an enemy, but to up-helm and run, we wrote:—"In the latter case, his stern is more vulnerable than are the bows of the ship chasing him, and she has, therefore, the best chance of using her guns with effect." It is needless for us to go through the gallant Admiral's letter seriatim, as he appears to be of the same opinion as ourselves,—that more ships are required for the Navy, and that they should be seaworthy, fast, handy, strong-bowed rams. We would also like to see the French plan of armouring stern adopted in this country. Indeed, in our opinion, the stern should be as capable of delivering a ram-blow above water as is the prow below water. Neither should it be forgotten that the French ships are so armoured, and that, consequently, being of greater speed than the English ships, they need never fear a stern chase, while in a general or fleet action their towed torpedoes would deter many a man from venturing to adopt the end-on attack, lest he miss his mark and fall foul of that infernal machine his great object is to steer clear of. These are all questions of opinion, no doubt, as Admiral Elliot maintains. At the same time, we have certain facts to go upon. They are these. The French modern ships are faster than ours, they are protected both at the bow and stern by heavy armour-plates, they are built to ram, and they tow torpedoes on their quarters. The English ships are slower than the French, they are not protected at either the bow or the stern by armour-plates, they cannot be termed ram-built ships, as their bows are structurally too weak to withstand the shock, and would probably telescope under its pressure, and we do not tow torpedoes in action. These are all facts from which even the most sanguine Englishman would hardly dare to assume that, as a matter of course, an English fleet or squadron would, as in the days of old, come out of every Naval combat victorious and without loss. As a matter of course, their are many who will differ from us in opinion. We can only hope that the day is not at hand when actual practice shall decide between us, and trust there is yet time for England's Fleet to be increased by many a strong-bowed ship, armoured at both ends, and well able to keep the sea, and sweep the sea of England's enemies, if need be.

The Queen left Sheerness on April 16, on board the Royal yacht Osborne, Commander Holland, and, accompanied by the Royal yacht Alberta and the Admiralty yacht Enchantress, proceeded to Flushing. Her Majesty proceeded at once to Darmstadt.

The Admiralty are learning at last that to send out Marines in the manner they recently did to Egypt, is both unwise and costly. There being an absence of any Staff, and the battalion being first under the Navy Act, and then under the Army Act, no record seems to have been kept of anything. The result is endless confusion in all the accountant departments.

A correspondent calls our attention to the manner in which the seamen serving on board the ships-of-war stationed in Portsmouth Harbour parade the streets, without the slightest intention of saluting officers when they pass them. A Military officer they never salute, a Naval officer but seldom, and a Volunteer officer they positively jeer at, says our correspondent. We hope that, for the credit of the Navy, such a state of things will not be tolerated. No wonder courts-martial for acts of insubordination are so numerous, when such an independent and intolerant spirit is allowed to exist.

We are sorry to see that the Admiralty have not directed their attention to the construction of some light-draught ironclads, a description of vessel very much needed in the British Fleet, as exemplified by the utilising of such an obsolete vessel as the Penelope in the late Egyptian War. We have for some years back been under the necessity of utilising two ironclads to perform the duties of flagship on the China station, one being at home under repairs, the other out there, for the simple reason that we have no other ironclads of a draught sufficiently light to proceed through the Suez Canal. For many years back the French ironclads on the China station have been vessels drawing not more than 18 feet, and the flagship of the French Naval Commander-in-Chief on that station has invariably been able to anchor off the foreign settlement at Shanghai, while the English flagship has to anchor sixteen miles down the river, at Woosung, for the simple reason that she draws too much water to allow of her proceeding further up.

The Admiralty have purchased the yacht Wave at a cost of £7,000 to act as a tender to the Britannia. After expending £2,500 in alterations in this small craft, the Admiralty sent her on her trial trip, when she struck on a rock at Dartmouth, and sustained such injury to her stern-post and keel that she will now need to have part of a new stern put in. The Admiralty could have built a new yacht for the money this old craft will cost them.

An officer writes as follows respecting the behaviour of some of the men of the Royal Navy at the Volunteer Review. We think and hope there must have been a mistake:—"The seamen stared at the Duke and his Staff like country bumpkins, never saluting. In fact, some, or rather many, I saw, never took the trouble to get off the grass on which they were lying, but remained there, staring in his Royal Highness's face as he passed. I wonder what the Duke thought of discipline in the Navy after this most discreditable exhibition? Boys of the St. Vincent, who would have stood up at attention and touched their caps to John Smith, A.B. seaman instructor, allowed the Duke to pass them with a jeer and a smile, if they did not even give vent to their feelings by the use of insulting language. I noticed one Naval officer, acting as galloper, who delivered orders to commanding officers without paying the slightest regard to the established rules with respect to compliments, retaining the stump of a cigar—fancy a military officer smoking on duty!—between his fingers, whilst addressing his superior." The Volunteers are evidently acquiring habits of discipline. It is a good sign. If the Easter gathering of 1884 has done nothing else, it has at least shown that, in some respects, they will bear comparison with her Majesty's paid forces. It is more creditable to them, and the knowledge that these facts are observed by their countrymen should stimulate them to make further exertions. We purposely refrain from criticising their marching powers, for the good-feeling and soldierly characteristics they have evinced are, in such a body, of far more importance than barrack-square drill.

We are given to understand that the Admiralty have selected Captain Charles F. Hotham, C.B., to command the Dreadnought, to be commissioned in July.

The Admiralty have determined to save as much expense as possible in maintaining an ambassadorial yacht at Constantinople. The Imogene is to have a crew of 35, all told. She will carry neither a doctor nor a paymaster, and her engines will be under the charge of a chief engine-room artificer. This is carrying economy to extremes.

The supply of breech-loading guns to the Fleet appears to be a very slow proceeding; but even those ships that are fitted with them are not always in a position to use them, owing to some bungling respecting the necessary appliances for them. This has lately been the case, we believe, with both the Heroine and Satellite, which vessels have for some time past not been able to fire their guns owing to there being no tubes for them in store on the Pacific station. This would have been rather awkward for them if they had been engaged in hostilities.

A return just issued by order of the House of Commons shows that during the past ten years the mortality in the Navy arising from falls from aloft has been 172; from drowning, 1,060; from suicide, 48; and from wounds, injuries, and explosions, exclusive of men killed in action, 423; total, 1,703. The number of ships in commission at this moment is 246, with 73 tenders. In 1879, the number was 255, with 75 tenders. There are now serving in the Navy 46,616 officers, seamen, marines, and boys, against 49,147 in 1879. There are also serving in the guardships, at home and abroad, 21,109 of all ranks, against 21,850 in 1879. During the past ten years, seven men-of-war have foundered, 63 have been stranded, 228 have collided, and 358 miscellaneous accidents have occurred to ships on various stations.

The Committee on Seamen's Certificates, which has been sitting at the Admiralty for the past few months, and to which Assistant-Paymaster W. H. F. Kay was secretary, having made its report, that officer has resumed his former post in the office of the Port Admiral at Plymouth, Assistant-Paymaster C. D. W. Kiddle returning to his duties on board the Royal Adelaide.

In the Royal Navy List for April, there is a new feature, the appearance of which we notice with pleasure. After the names of several ships in the Navy, the names of any famous Naval actions in which those ships, or any of their predecessors that bore the same names took part, are shown, as battles and sieges appear in the Army List. While wishing success to Colonel Lean in his laudable effort to cultivate in the ships of the Royal Navy a feeling analogous to that esprit de corps by which, till lately, the Regular Regiments of the British Army were actuated, we think it only fair to observe that he cannot claim originality in the step he has taken. An article which appeared in this paper on January 8, 1881, strongly advocated the bearing of such honours by our warships, both emblazoned on the sterns and embroidered on the ensigns. While claiming priority for the writer of the article to which we refer, we do not for a moment suppose that Colonel Lean intentionally adopted the suggestions of another without acknowledgment.

In Burgoyne's "Historical Records"* of the 93rd Sutherland Highlanders ("now," by non-association of ideas and the perversity of the War Office, "the 2nd Battalion Princess Louise's Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders"), there is an account of the way in which the regiment was raised which may well cause "the thoughtful persons" who helped Colonel Stanley to develope his territorial scheme, to contrast the good old times with the present bad ones, when even the bounty offered privately by the ducal house of Sutherland to recruits does not suffice to fill the ranks from the wide domains of the house which span the north of Scotland from sea to sea. The agents of the Countess of Sutherland took a census of the population, and ordered a certain proportion of the able-bodied males to join "Major-General Wemyss's Regiment of Infantry," and 460 of the 596 rank and file of which the regiment was composed, left strath and glen, in Sutherland, for Inverness. If there was one thing that never entered into the head of any of those "Volunteers," it certainly was the idea that he could be converted into an Argyll man. There was, later on, indeed, a marriage between a Duke of Argyll and a daughter of the House of Sutherland (the lamented Duchess who died not long ago), but the process of reasoning by which Argylls in the south-west of Scotland and south of the Grampians, and Sutherland, in the north of Scotland, could be supposed to have a common interest in a Highland regiment, can only be followed by the clever people who supposed that by giving names to a certain number of battalions, they could get recruits to fill them in districts where the whole able-bodied population willing to join would not suffice to fill half the number of the newly organised legions. Now, undeterred by the tremendous pother raised against them by the infuriated Highlanders, who "fizzed out with angry fyke" against them for their outrageous menaces against the feather bonnet, these daring and profane officials actually propose to interfere with the Sutherland tartan, and to clothe the 93rd in the tartan of some Skye bodies! Tantæne animis coelestibus iræ! There are limits beyond which endurance becomes weakness.

Lord Wolseley recently enlightened the cabmen of London upon the glorious deeds done by the British soldier in the Soudan Campaign. His listeners were asked to believe that not in the memory of man had such hard fighting taken place. But has his lordship no memory? When he crowed so loudly over the recent deeds of British arms, had he quite forgotten the long hand-to-hand struggle there was at Inkerman? There was hard fighting, too, in the last Afghan campaign against a foe quite equal in courage and fanaticism. And there surely was hard fighting at Isandlwana, Rorke's Drift, and Ulundi.

The oldest officer on the field on Monday at Portsmouth was Lord Ranelagh. His lordship entered the 1st Life Guards as cornet on September 7, 1829, fifty-five years ago. He became lieutenant March 23, 1832. He exchanged in 1833 as lieutenant from the Household Cavalry to the 7th Fusiliers, which regiment he served in as subaltern until 1836, when he retired by sale of his commission. He became major commanding the 2nd Middlesex R.V., October 14, 1859, and when the strength of the corps was increased he was appointed lieutenant-colonel; but he has not been required to resign, and although he has tenaciously held views antagonistic to those of the military authorities and never scrupled to express them on volunteering matters, he was, in 1881, one of the five Volunteers selected for the honour of a K.C.B.

It will be noticed from the announcement in Tuesday's Gazette, that the statement we made some weeks ago as to the probable selection of Lieutenant-General Sir George Willes as successor to General H.S.H. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, in command of the Southern District, is confirmed. Sir George Willes will take up duty from May 1, and will probably retain the appointment for five years.

"Who shall decide, when doctors disagree?" There is a clever Commissioner of Health at Kingston, Jamaica, whose annual report, in itself an interesting and able document, contains some paragraphs of a controversial character respecting the sanitary condition of Port Royal, showing that the Commissioner of Health does not agree with the late Deputy-Inspector-General of the Army and Navy Hospital, Doctor Fegan, or Commodore Purvis, or Sir W. Commerell, who had moved the Admiralty to move the Governor to stop certain nuisances presumed to be actively engaged in favour of yellow-fever. Now Mr. Scott, who is, we presume, a doctor, and who certainly may claim a right to put up the Scotch motto of "Nemo me impune lacessit," not only controverts the assertions of Commodore and doctors but declares that the death-rate at Port Royal would compare favourably with that of any seaport town in England or the West Indies! Mr. Scott denies there was any epidemic of yellow-fever at all at Port Royal, except it be held that a little private outbreak, known only to the doctor himself, should be considered epidemic. We can only say that Mr. Scott has made out a strong case in his report, but it can matter little to the men who undoubtedly died at Kingston how it all happened. He not only asserts there was no epidemic, but he demands inquiry. Dr. Mosse quite corroborates Mr. Scott's statements.

The Morning Post of Thursday contained a paper on the "Invasion of India by Russia," considered as a project in relation to the means possessed by Russia in 1877, and those furnished to her by the position she occupies to-day, which deserves serious consideration. But the disease is more easily detected than the way of meeting it is established. The advance of Russia is inevitable; it is the force of gravitation which attracts her frozen masses towards the south—the irresistible seduction of heat, and life, and light. There are two obstacles to her advance, one physical, the other moral, but the latter is to be created or strengthened. The barriers which Nature has opposed to her march are not impassable, but they are formidable. The irrefranchisable barrier which all her legions could not cross would be a loyal, happy, and prosperous Hindostan—strong in something more than lip-professions of prostrate adoration of an invisible Empress, "alien in blood, religion, and language." The ability and largeness of view evinced by Russia in her dealings with Asiatics are perhaps natural gifts we may despair of emulating, but we may at least try to force our rugged, unsympathetic race into some show of sympathy with the people among whom we rule by force of arms alone. How the Guards would be convulsed with indignation at the idea of a young Indian Prince receiving a commission in one of the heptarchical battalions! How the Life Guards and Blues would resent the notion of a Sikh Sirdar or a Rajpoot Rajah being admitted among them! Sir Dighton Probyn and other distinguished Indian officers who from time to time proposed that there should be a native Body Guard or representative corps, to create a link between India and England of the strongest kind, have been chilled into silence. In Russia it is far different. Georgian, Circassian, Turcoman Princes and chiefs, are received into the service and into the best regiments; they are taught in the technical schools; they are attached to the Court; they are loaded with favours and attentions; and they in time become heart and soul Russians, and in time Russianize their people. But we who are only nomads in India—dwellers in bungalows and tents, who are encamped and do not abide—contemn these arts, and are engaged in an incessant struggle with "the natives." These are considerations we may well take to heart, when we are dealing with the advance of Russia towards the Himalayas.

The correspondent of the Figaro in the Soudan says that when down the Nile, he one day wanted to go out dove-shooting, but to this the English officer in command of the troops objected, on the ground that his men, if they heard a shot fired, would make unto themselves wings, and fly away.

It appears to us that our gallant neighbours have been engaged in "breaking a butterfly on the wheel." Hanoi, Bacninh, Honghoa, and Donvang have fallen one after the other, without any resistance worthy of the name. It is said that a large number of Chinese officers are to be decapitated, pour encourager les autres, and that Li Hung Chang is to be degraded. It is to be remarked that in all these affairs the positions of the enemy were turned, and yet in each instance the garrisons, after experiencing a certain loss, managed to make good their escape. It is also to be noticed that the rapid success of the French appears to have been due in a great measure to their artillery, which evidently played havoc with the pagodas, &c. General Millot says that the effect created by his guns at Honghoa was terrific. It remains to be seen how far the French will now push matters, and what compensation they intend exacting from China for a participation with the Black and Yellow Flags which she can no longer deny.

General Saussier, who is looked upon as the Commander-in-Chief of the Army in case of war, has just assumed his new post as Military Governor of Paris.

The 39th Dorsetshire Regiment, at Aldershot, is now being supplied with the new experimental clothing, of khaki material, as prepared by the Aldershot Active-Service Dress Committee. The coat, or tunic, is provided with several pockets, and rows of small receptacles are placed on each breast for holding cartridges. The new clothing will be thoroughly tested during the drill season, under conditions approximating to those of active service. The new dress is intended for all dismounted troops, in peace and war, in temperate climates. Experiments will be carried out simultaneously at several stations, and a report forwarded to Army head-quarters on the subject at the termination of the drill season. Blue undress uniform will be worn by officers whose battalions are provided with the new clothing. When brigaded with other regiments, in full dress, for inspection by the Commander-in-Chief, or on other special occasions, officers will appear in red.

The "Egyptian Question" is one which every one is asking, and which no one is answering. It is our Eastern Question, par excellence. It is scarcely within the limits of the possible that will end in "Peace, with Honour!" For the Army first, and the Navy afterwards, and for both together, the business is likely to be full of interest and excitement if the outcries of the London Press and of the Cairo London correspondents be accepted as the solemn decrees of British statesmen,—"Shriek answers unto shriek." The delicate monster which utters foul speeches, and detracts at one end of the wire, praises his friends at the other. A Protectorate is the one thing needful to set everything right, but that panacea cannot be had for the asking, or proclaimed off-hand from Downing Street. Hobart Pasha, who must be in a very uncertain position, and has to write instead of fight, reminds us this week that his master the Sultan, poor man! had a word to say about Egypt yet, but his audience may be critical, select, or deaf. Any way, Hobart Pasha is not likely to envy his friend and colleague, Baker Pasha, his recent experiences of active service under the red flag and the white crescent. Colonel Burnaby, in his very interesting recitals of what he saw during the recent operations, in which he bore a distinguished part, has made some statements in reference to the circumstances under which Baker Pasha transferred his services from the Sultan to the Khedive, which will probably be controverted; but those who recollect our correspondent's letters from Egypt in 1882-3, and the articles in this paper on the very painful and discreditable, as well as discrediting, circumstances which occurred after Pasha Baker had assumed the command of the Egyptian Army, need not be assured that, in our opinion, the treatment, by orders from home, of that officer was of a very shameful, unfeeling, and impolitic character.

The illustrated papers are not always happy in their military pictures. Take the Illustrated London News of the 12th inst., for example. What is the officer in charge of the carrying party at the funeral of the late Duke of Albany doing with his sword? If the artist is correct, then we hope, for the officer's sake, that his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge did not see him. Then, again, in the representation entitled "The Seaforth Highlanders Bearing the Body in St. George's Chapel," what are they bearing the body on? Apparently either their forearms or their hands, for the coffin is certainly not on their shoulders; and the officer in charge seems to be using his sword as a walking-stick. Then, in the drawings of the Volunteers, the 3rd Middlesex man looks like a navvy with trousers supported by a strap below the knee, and above his boot he seems to have a metal funnel on, instead of a gaiter. We have recently been favoured with most graphic pictures of the battles in the Soudan, where the Soudanese were apparently gifted with the power of flying, and seem to hold their shields over their heads, while they thrust their stomachs on the sharp steel of sword and bayonet. The contemplation of these pictures makes us regret more than ever the slaughter of these brave men; for with their wonderful powers of bounding, they would have won the "high-jump" at every athletic meeting in England, had some enterprising person brought them over.

The French Chamber has lately been the scene of an important debate upon the law of recruiting, which it is proposed to alter. The Franco-German War was no sooner brought to a close, than a thorough re-organisation of the French Army was determined upon, and the period of service was one of the matters which gave rise to the most prolonged and animated discussions. M. Thiers was then President of the Republic, and was warmly attached to the long-service system, while General Trochu and some of his friends earnestly pleaded in favour of short service. The fight lay between the advocates of a relatively small, well-trained, compact Government army, in which the men should serve seven years, and a huge mass of men constituting a National Army, in the ranks of which every able-bodied Frenchman should serve for three years. The short service appearing to M. Thiers to be rank heresy, he threatened to resign if it were adopted. After a desperate struggle, a compromise was agreed upon, and five years' service in the active army was agreed to. It was also agreed that a certain number of youths intended for the liberal professions should, after passing an examination, be allowed to volunteer for one year. Exemptions were made in favour of schoolmasters, youths being trained for the Church, &c.; and as the annual contingent would furnish more men than the Estimates could possibly provide for, it was arranged that the second portion of each contingent should be called out merely for a short training each year. Now, this system, which created certain classes, was abhorrent to the democratic mind, which has never ceased insisting that the "blood-tax" should be equally supported by all citizens, that there should be no volunteers, no second portion of the contingent, and no exemptions, except in the case of youths whose presence at home was absolutely necessary for the support of their families. A great many attempts have been made to upset the arrangement of 1872, but up to the present without success. Now, however, the Chamber, by a majority of 508 to 1, has agreed to take short service into consideration, and to discuss the clauses of a Bill brought forward by General Campenon, with the intention of giving full satisfaction to the Radical party. In support of his measure, the War Minister indulged in declarations to the following effect:—"A good recruiting law should furnish both quantity and quality,—quantity, because to-day, more than ever, success will depend on large effectives; quality, because in modern warfare the soldier has a more difficult and important part to play than in past times." Ergo, our modern Moloch requires quantity and quality, which, according to General Campenon, may be obtained by obliging all citizens to serve in the ranks for three years. Under the present system, it has been found almost impossible to secure a sufficient supply of good serjeants and corporals, and it is argued that with a further reduction in the period of service, this difficulty will be increased. The War Minister, however, thinks that, under the proposed system, it will be easy to procure the requisite number of non-commissioned officers, id est 27,000. "To-day," he says, "the Army is deprived of the intelligent and educated portion of our youths." By sweeping this intelligent and educated portion into the ranks, good non-commissioned officers will be at once obtained. The portion here referred to is the portion which volunteered for one year, and which consequently furnished no serjeants or corporals. General Campenon also perceives another excellent end which will be attained by forcing the intellectual portion of the rising generation to serve for three years. This portion will not only furnish non-commissioned officers at short notice, but, as the War Minister says, "the non-commissioned officers thus obtained will have that moral ascendency over their inferiors which is always given by superior education, intelligence, and instruction,—which moral ascendency is wanting to-day." Here, then, is a new law, introduced to establish perfect equality, to do away with every kind of privilege, and which will certainly damage the commercial, artistic, and scientific interests of the country; and yet General Campenon admits that this equality does not exist. He depends on the superior attainments and moral ascendency of one class to command another class less intellectually favoured. In other words, he depends for his non-commissioned officers on gentlemen. The French War Minister quoted several authorities to show that a soldier can be formed in three years; but we remark that he spoke only of infantry. Now, most of the authorities who hold that a foot soldier of the line can be formed in three years do not extend that opinion to cavalry and to men of the scientific branches; and one of the chief objections to reducing the period of service to three years always was that that period would have to be reduced, in the interest of equality, for all branches alike. In fact, it would be impossible to say to the foot soldier,—"Go thou, and serve three years;" and to the trooper, the gunner, and the engineer,—"Go ye, and serve five." To insist upon the pupils in the seminaries serving in the ranks seems both unjustifiable and dangerous. The War Minister has more men at his disposal than he knows what to do with, while there are any number of parishes in France without curés. As a general rule, the present measure is unpopular in military circles, and even some Republican papers disapprove of it. The Progrès Militaire, however, which is in favour of the Bill, makes the following assertion:—"There is not an officer who will not be thankful to the Chamber for causing the social interest to yield in order to assure the force of the new Army." Another military critic asks how the Minister of War will be able to incorporate three contingents without greatly exceeding the Estimates. A contingent means, in round numbers, 300,000 men; and unless the Estimates be exceeded or augmented, the Minister of War will not be able to incorporate more than 170,000 of these men. What will become of the other 100,000? (one must allow 30,000 as the number of men unfit for service). It is possible that the Bill may be explained and amended in Committee, but it looks very much as if our neighbours were sacrificing too much to the idol of the moment.

It really seems to us somewhat in the "'Erkles vein" for Colonel Burnaby to assert that the battle of El Teb vindicated the supremacy "of the Anglo-Saxon race," nom de Chien! As how? Let us suppose that Graham had 8,000 or 10,000 Anglo-Saxons, armed with swords and spears, under him, and that the interesting sheiks who commanded Osman Digna's people—say 4,000 strong, well-drilled and disciplined —had disposed their forces, with Gatlings, 9-pounders, and 7-pounder guns, efficient artillerymen, cavalry, and breechloaders in square, does Colonel Burnaby think the supremacy would have been vindicated so conclusively? The gallant officer has, it seems, gone in for short service on the strength of his experience of the Soudan expedition, but the regiments engaged there were surely not the raw boys who are objected to by officers at home, and Colonel Burnaby's ideas of short-service are so liberal as to give seven years with the colours as the proper term, and to secure non-commissioned officers of mature age, by giving them large inducements to carry on in the shape of liberal increase of pay. We have no doubt that young fellows of 21 years of age are apt for fighting, and that for every year after till they become stale they improve as soldiers for all purposes of campaigning; but we hold it would be unwise and unsafe to take the field against a European enemy with a first line of juvenile battalions, and that for the purpose of a long campaign, apart from mere fighting, they would be very expensive and very wasteful.

The prospect of "military operations" (not war, of course, oh, no! we never mention it! Its name is never heard!) between the Australian Colonists and the French citizens inhabiting, or to inhabit, New Caledonia, "stern and wild, meet nurse of Crime's erratic child," is not exhilarating. In Malleson's admirable "History of the French in India," there are some interesting descriptions of the early and irregular "Military and Naval operations" between the English factories and the French settlements, which at times did not depend on war between England and France at all, there are passages which describe civilised warfare very unlike what we should see if the descendants of the New South Wales colonists were to be let loose to work their will on the Récidivistes; but it is plain that the contest would speedily cease to be local, and that the mother countries would have to interfere in a very decided fashion. But if it be an "affaire d'ordre purement," as M. Ferry says, and if the whole question is one of internal arrangement and municipal law, how would it be if the Australasian Governments were to refuse permission to any "settlers" emerging from New Caledonia to land on their shores without clean bills of moral health? We are told that the French criminals will certainly inundate the best parts of the British Colonies out there, and it is very evident that if they do, their lot will not be cast in pleasant places. Meanwhile, it will be interesting to see what is the export trade of France in Récidivistes, and how many cargoes the French Government can export. Logically, perhaps, M. Ferry is right, but the sequence may be unpleasant, and the old legal adage, "Summum jus summa injuria," is one that the Quai d'Orsay politicians may do well to ponder upon.

One of the most desirable regimental commands, that of the York District, is about to become vacant by the retirement of Colonel R. B. Chichester.

THE STATE OF THE NAVY.

At a time when the country is increasing its responsibilities abroad, the Admiralty are placing reduced Estimates before Parliament. Even at this moment our ships on some distant stations could scarcely hold their own against those of foreign Powers; and were the Government to declare a Protectorate over Egypt, complications would arise which might tax our Naval resources to the very utmost. There is not a fourteen days' supply of corn in England at any time, except immediately after the harvest. The grain annually imported now amounts to some 400 million quarters, as against eight million quarters 40 years ago. The enormous responsibility thrown upon the fleet in time of war is apparent at a glance. Our ships will have to keep the ocean highways open; and unless these are clear, the food of the people of these isles will not reach them. Regarding the actual cost of our Navy simply as a matter of insurance, the premium paid by the nation is admitted to be small in comparison to the risk; for England owns nearly 20 million tons of shipping, worth about 200 million pounds, and has besides to receive over 150 millions' worth of sea-borne commodities, representing supplies of food necessary to her people, and without which they must needs starve. These great interests dare not be rashly hazarded by any political party, for they mean nothing more nor less than our national life; and to protect this life our Navy must be maintained at the highest efficiency. The Fleet should always be sufficiently numerous, swift, and well-armed to sweep from the ocean not only the whole fleet of any single rival, but of any combination of foreign Naval Powers. In its present condition, however, the Navy would be unable to do more than hold its own against the French Navy, if as much. To drive those vessels into their harbours would be impossible, for the French ships are, as a rule, swifter than ours. We have already pointed out that, with the exception of machine-guns, the French vessels are also better armed than are our own, and yet the French Navy Estimates amount to over £10,000,000, and have been steadily increased by about £300,000, a great part of which is for shipbuilding. Our Estimates are somewhat over ten millions sterling, but have now been decreased; and yet our Naval duties extend over the whole world. France does not rely on foreign produce to feed her people. The question, indeed, has been discussed as much abroad as it has on this side of the "silver streak," and a feeling has been gradually growing amongst others besides Naval men, that the advance made by foreign Powers since the introduction of torpedoes and torpedo-boats as offensive engines of war, has left this country in a position well calculated to disquiet the minds of Englishmen. Neither in ships nor in guns is our Fleet what it should be. As Sir Thomas Brassey points out, the French are arming the Amiral Baudin and the Formidable with three 100-ton guns in turrets, and in addition to these formidable vessels, to which we can only oppose one Inflexible, the French Admiralty hope to complete two similar ships by 1885. It is quite true that Sir Thomas Brassey has publicly named our three ships—the Devastation, Dreadnought, and Thunderer—as the three most powerful ships in the world; but when it is remembered that these vessels have no fore-and-aft bulkheads, similar to those found in the Italian and French armour-clads, and in our own newest types, it must be admitted that Sir Thomas Brassey spoke somewhat hastily. The Douro disaster, and others, prove that a war-ship without fore-and-aft bulkhead is doomed, if once struck by a ram. It is impossible to shut one's eyes to the fact that our Irish and Egyptian policies are so costly, that the defensive forces have to be starved to find the means wherewith to carry them out. It is illogical to make the country dependent on foreign supplies, and, at the same time, cut down the strength of its defensive forces.

Lieut. W. G. White, of the Bittern, has, says a Reuter's telegram from Constantinople, been appointed English delegate in the Commission which is about to proceed to the Archipelago on board the Turkish Government steamer Ismail, in order to select an island to be used as a quarantine station, in lieu of the existing one.

Lord Ravensworth has consented to preside over the Departmental Committee which the Government have promised, on the suggestion of Mr. C. M. Palmer, M.P., to appoint for the purpose of inquiring into the management of the Government dockyards.

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

The first sham-fight of the season took place on Monday last, and was ordered for the special instruction of two Volunteer corps,—1st Berks, and 11th Middlesex. The former battalion only came here for the field-day, returning to Reading on its conclusion. The latter left the Camp on Tuesday afternoon, having been quartered in the South Camp from the previous Friday. Of the operations on the Fox Hills, so much has already been written that it is unnecessary to say more on the subject here. It is as well, however, to point out that instead of the number of troops on the ground exceeding 10,000, as stated in the Times of Tuesday, the total number present only amounted to 5,696 men, with 1,391 horses, and 46 guns,—this number including more than 1,000 Volunteers. The Infantry Brigades of the Division consist at the present time of but seven and a half battalions. The 1st Infantry Brigade is composed of three battalions. Their numbers on parade were as follows:—73rd Highlanders, 324; 85th Light Infantry, 339; and 26th Cameronians, 425. It would take a good many battalions of this sort to form a Division of 10,000 men. The foregoing figures are from the official field state.

H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief will probably make his spring inspection of the Division during the ensuing week.

Several accidents having recently occurred during shelter-trench exercise and field-work instruction, by the incautious use of pickaxe and shovel, a memorandum of instructions for the use of tools by working parties has been circulated during the week by order of the Lieutenant-General commanding, for general information and future guidance.

The School of Instruction for Officers of the Infantry Auxiliary Forces will be reopened on May 1.

The whole of the Infantry bands of the Division were massed on the General Parade, South Camp, on Wednesday morning last, and, under the senior bandmaster, and in the presence of Colonel C. M. Clarke, C.B., A.A.G. of the Division, were practised in the National Anthem and the various brigade and regimental marching-past tunes. It has been found that the regulation cadence has not been adhered to in all corps, hence the necessity of practice to attain uniformity.

Major-General C. C. Fraser, V.C., C.B., commanding Cavalry Brigade, has been inspecting his command by regiments during the week, commencing with the 2nd Dragoon Guards (Queen's Bays), on Wednesday.

The serjeants of the 11th Middlesex R.V. were entertained at supper by the staff serjeants of the Division, in their spacious mess-room, in Q Lines, South Camp, on Saturaday last. The garrison serjeant-major occupied the chair, and a most enjoyable evening was spent. On Monday last, the serjeants of the Volunteer corps returned the compliment with interest, in their mess-room in L Lines, an extension of time having been granted by their commanding officer for the purpose. The kind feeling which existed between the 11th Middlesex and all ranks and branches of the Regulars during their brief sojourn at the Camp was very marked.

Obituary.

Admiral W. G. Hyndman Whish, one of the oldest officers in the Navy, died on Monday, aged 87. Born in 1797, he entered the Navy in June, 1808, as a first-class volunteer on board the St. George, and he afterwards became midshipman. In 1814, he served at the capture of Genoa, and two years later he was present at the bombardment of Algiers, for which he received the medal and clasp, and was promoted to be lieut. His last appointment was in 1837, to the Gannet, on the North American and West Indies station, whence he returned home, and was paid off in the early part of 1838. He was gazetted a capt. in Nov., 1841; admiral on the Retired List, April, 1862; retired vice-admiral, May, 1867; and admiral, July, 1875.

Five boys serving on board the Lion, at Devonport, went into Plymouth Sound on Sunday afternoon in a small hired boat. While they were setting sail a sudden squall struck the boat and capsized her. The occupants of another boat pulled towards them and succeeded in rescuing four of their number, but the fifth, J. Bishop, who was unable to swim, was drowned.

Under the system in vogue in this country (says the Hampshire Telegraph) a serious expenditure, unknown abroad, exists. For, whereas in France and Germany officers are employed at the Admiralty instead of being relegated to half-pay, in this country they are placed on half-pay, while civilians, drawing enormous salaries ranging from £700 to £1,000 a year, are employed to do the work the naval officer should do, and would do better than the civilian were he allowed to, for the small sum of about £365 a year. The saving effected in the difference of pay drawn by the civilian heads of departments, principal and senior clerks, and that drawn by naval officers if appointed in their stead, would enable a very large additional sum to be yearly spent in the construction of ironclads. This would at the very lowest estimate effect a saving in the administration of the Navy of over £20,000 a year, a sum not to be despised when "Retrenchment" is one of the watchwords of the Government.

The silver medal for long service and good-conduct has just been awarded to 204 non-commissioned officers and men. The recipients include four of the Household Cavalry, 18 of the Cavalry of the Line, 24 of the Royal Artillery, 17 of the Royal Engineers, eight of the Brigade of Guards, and 122 of the Infantry of the Line.

The Army.

1st Life Guards. Col. Keith Fraser, late of the regiment, is suffering from an attack of fever on board the Ganges. He is on his way home from India.

3rd Dragoon Guards. A party of 45 non-commissioned officers and men, under command of Capt. Pryce, returned from Fleetwood on the 14th inst., after completing course of musketry. The first squadron of the regiment has just finished its month's course of drill, under command of Major Amyatt Burney. On Monday and Tuesday the squadron was inspected by Lieut.-Col. Murray, in drill, outpost duty, camping, &c., and was satisfied at all. During the month lectures of a useful nature, on various subjects, were given by Major Burney, assisted by Lieut. Roche.

3rd Hussars. The colonelcy is vacant by the death of Gen. Sir G. H. Lockwood, K.C.B., which occurred on Tuesday, in Wilton Street, Belgrave Square. The general entered the Army in March, 1825, and saw considerable service in India. He commanded the regiment throughout the campaign in 1842 in Afghanistan (C.B., and medal). He was present at the forcing of the Khyber Pass, the storming of the heights of Jugdulluck, the action of Tezeen, and Huft Kotul, the occupation of Cabul, and the siege and capture of Istaliff. He also served in the Punjab campaign of 1848-49, and commanded a brigade at the battle of Goojerat (medal with clasp). He was made a K.C.B. in 1867. He was appointed colonel of the 12th Lancers in March, 1861, which he held till Jan., 1872, when he was transferred to the 3rd Hussars. His commissions bore date as follows:—Lieut., Aug., 1826; capt., Sept., 1832; major, March, 1839; brevet lieut.-col., Dec., 1842; lieut.-col., Nov., 1846; col., Aug., 1850; major-gen., Nov., 1854; lieut.-gen., Sept., 1862; and gen., Oct., 1870; and was placed on the Retired List in Oct., 1877.

15th Hussars. Col. Luck, C.B., completes his period of service in command on the 29th inst.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The regimental steeplechases will take place to-day on a new course in the Plumstead Marshes. With reference to the meeting, the following notice was recently published:—"It is hoped that officers will not withhold their subscriptions this year in consequence of their having paid them last year, when the meeting was abandoned. The question of the 1883 subscriptions was fully discussed at the general meeting, held in London on May 30 last, when it was unanimously decided that they should be retained, and that the money thus raised should be expended in making the new course, purchase of stands, and other necessary plant. Should the meeting of 1884 prove a failure, it seems probable that the races, which have been in existence for 22 years, will be discontinued. It is hoped, therefore, that all officers will support the meeting by subscribing to the fund, and that those officers who have horses will enter and run them." The stewards are Cols. T. E. Byrne, A. H. W. Williams, R.H.A., and A. H. King, R.A.; starter, Lieut.-Col. B. F. Schreiber, C.B., R.A.; judge and clerk of the scales, Major A. E. Turner, R.A.; clerk of the course and stakeholder, Lieut.-Col. S. H. Toogood. Committee of management:—President, Col. A. H. W. Williams, R.H.A.; members, Lieut.-Col. Wortham, R.A., Capt. the Hon. W. C. Rowley, R.H.A., Lieut. A. H. Carter, R.H.A.

The following movements have been ordered to take place during this month:—V Baty. 1st Brig., Chatham to Aldershot; H Baty. 2nd Brig., Bristol to Sheffield; K Baty. 2nd Brig., Sheffield to Woolwich; Q Baty. 2nd Brig., Sheffield to Bristol; S. Baty. 2nd Brig., Woolwich to Ipswich; and D Baty. 3rd Brig., Ipswich to Chatham.

Capt. F. C. Morgan, R.A., Honorary Secretary, R.A. Regimental Charities, would be obliged if any officer who is interested in the following case, would communicate with him:—At Aden, in 1874, a comparatively large sum of money was collected for the benefit of the widow and children of 1,197, Serjt. Robert Bridges, 6th Baty. 6th Brig. (now 4th Brigade, Scottish), R.A., who was shot in his quarters. The widow subsequently re-married, and the money was invested in the Savings' Bank for the benefit of the three children whose ages would now be 15, 12, and 10 respectively. Their present whereabouts is unknown, and up to this date no information whatever about them can be obtained. The sum of money is now over £170.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The Morning Post says:—"Before his last return to England, Gen. Gordon was for some months engaged in assisting the Rev. J. R. Langley Hall, of the Church Missionary Society, in missionary work in Syria. Mr. Hall, who is a brother of the Rev. H. Armstrong Hall, rector of Holy Trinity, St. Philip's, Bristol, is stationed at Jaffa, and writing to a relative in England under date of April 4, he says:—'We have had another letter from Gen. Gordon, from Khartoum. He says no human power can deliver us now, for we are surrounded, and unless God causes the savage Arab tribes to disperse, no English troops will do so until they have sacked Khartoum and massacred the inhabitants. The Mahdi is only a name now, what the people want is plunder.' Mr. Hall adds:—'We are terribly distressed, and I wish I could copy you his touching letter, but I have not heart to do so. He expresses his firmest confidence in God, but says he longs to be back with us.'"

Coldstream Guards. Col. the Hon. E. H. T. Digby has issued an address, stating that he will not seek re-election for the Parliamentary representation of Dorsetshire.

Scots Guards. The 1st Batn. moved yesterday from the Tower of London to Aldershot, for a course of musketry and military training. The battalion will be accommodated in the North Camp, where it will remain for at least three months.

6th Royal Warwickshire Regiment. The 1st Batn. moved yesterday from Warley to the Tower of London.

11th Devonshire Regiment. Lieut. Gore, 2nd Batn., has leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate.

14th West Yorkshire Regiment. Our Journal, the regimental paper published at Sealkote, says:—"It is now just a year since our arrival in this station, and on the whole it has been by no means an unpleasant year. Doubtless it has had its drawbacks, as well as its advantages, first and foremost of which was the splitting-up of the regiment into two wings. But, in spite of these, our first year in Sealkote has been a successful one. Sickness has been hardly noticeable as might be supposed, considering Sealkote has the reputation of being one of the healthiest stations in the Punjab. We have lost numbers of men who have preferred going home to taking on; and though, since our arrival here, two drafts have come out from home, still we are far below our strength. Col. Warren's departure was keenly felt by all, both officers and men, as he had literally lived in the regiment for thirty-two years of his life. Again, the temptations of the Staff Corps have proved too much for several of our officers, who have left us to soldier with the kali paltan. And finally, so late as last month, we heard of the death of Lieut. London, drowned at Peshawur. This brings our list of casualties to a conclusion, with the exception of no less than five officers, who, during the last six months, have been led to the hymeneal altar. Considering that this is leap year, we hardly dare look forward to the number of officers who will follow their example before our second year in Sealkote has run its course. The draft for the year 1884 arrived here since our last publication went to press. It consisted of 120 men, with two serjeants and two corporals, Lieut. Vowell accompanying them. The numbers are certainly small when we consider how greatly the regiment is below strength. But we must make the best of them, and they will doubtless prove of great use during the coming hot weather. They are a fine, healthy-looking set of lads, Yorkshiremen most of them; and as soon as one or two black sheep have been weeded out of them, they promise to turn out very well."

18th Royal Irish Regiment. The 2nd Batn., at Malta, will be moved to India next winter.

23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers. Lieut. Cooper, 1st Batn., has leave from India to England for 12 months, on medical certificate.

24th South Wales Borderers. We noticed last week the death of Gen. Pringle Taylor, at Lymington, at the advanced age of 88. His record of Army service from "Hart" reads like a romance:—"Lieut.-Gen. Taylor proceeded in 1811 to join the 22nd Dragoons in the East Indies, where he served until October, 1820. He was in the field in 1815-16, and during the whole of the Mahratta War in 1817-19. The published official records show that his conduct was conspicuous in the brigade cavalry actions of Bucktowlie and of Najpore, and in that of Ashta, February, 1818, the enemy having charged, overthrew one regiment, and cut down the General commanding. He, as brigade-major, incurred the responsibility of countermanding the retreat, of ordering measures which terminated in the entire defeat of the Peishwa, the death of the commander-in-chief (Gokla), and he rescued the Rajah of Satarah—the influential events which terminated the war. At the siege of Capal Droog, he commanded a battery at the storm, May, 1819. He blew open the first gate with a galloper gun, and, heading the forlorn hope, he stormed in succession the five distinct circles of fortifications, every man and officer of his party being either killed or wounded; he received at the summit of that strong hill fort, at the moment of success in its capture, a shot through his lungs and body that killed the grenadier behind him. Specially recommended by the Governor-General for his services in India. Employed at the Cape, 1823-1824, against the Kaffirs. In 1827 he was sent to England from Malta to establish discipline in a corps that had fired at and nearly killed their adjutant. He took command, and the battalion shot at him three times on the public parade; they fired into his windows and shot through the cheek a field-aide who stood beside him. Without calling in other troops he suppressed the mutiny."

29th Worcestershire Regiment. Lieut. Clarke has leave from India to England for eight months, on urgent private affairs.

30th East Lancashire Regiment. Major Bannatyne has leave from India to England for 12 months, on private affairs.

31st East Surrey Regiment, at Gibraltar, will proceed to India next winter.

34th Border Regiment. Lieut. Hodgson is a candidate for the Indian S.C.

42nd Black Watch (Royal Highlanders). "Ex-Field Officer" writes:—"Now that the recent campaign in the Soudan is relegated to history, in which will be inscribed a golden page, recording an additional rôle of achievement earned honourably by the British soldier; now that all communications and details, public and private, have been received, sifted, digested, and amplified, it may not be inopportune to investigate in all calmness an unsavoury episode connected therewith, affecting detrimentally the renown of one of the most distinguished regiments in the service. The 'Old Forty-twa' has been derogatively mentioned in an official despatch, which has been perused with much astonishment by its many friends at home, inasmuch as it has in previous campaigns invariably been extolled for its disciplinary and dashing qualities. Granting that in time the new régime must deteriorate, and revolutionise the hitherto inborn, elevating, and national characteristics of Highland Regiments, it is nevertheless a tenable assertion that the present censure conveyed by Gen. Graham, subsequent to El Teb, was alike ungenerous and unwarranted. In the triumph of victory, military etiquette has hitherto, in official despatches, glossed over transient instances of troops being 'out of hand,' and it has been recognised that such unenviable record should be reserved for flagrant cases of misbehaviour or unjustifiable retreats, e.g., the Duke of Wellington. But at El Teb, was such the case? On the contrary, the testimony of correspondents, the concensus of unbiassed opinion, and the utterance of officers of high degree on the battlefield, one of whom said,—'Steady' (to another corps), 'call yourselves old soldiers! Look at those boys on your left—the Black Watch!'—all concur logically in a primâ-facie presumption, that the dogmatic assertion regarding the 42nd flaunted from the arbitrary and lofty pedestal of Sir Gerald's supreme position, was hardly justifiable, neither from a technical or untechnical standpoint. Such an averment is, in consonance with regulation, unimpeachable by those in the service; the paladium of common law is not open to them, hence it is incumbent on some one outside the sacred pale to vindicate the rights of the maligned. Only one positive assertion is stated in the indictment, namely, that the regiment was 'out of hand.' Who has been in action, in an attack, without perceiving that the very best of troops are so frequently? and the greater the dash the more this is perceptible. Failing direct evidence, another supposition is that the wrath and venom of the colossal General was aroused by the 'Black Watch' in some degree not advancing quick enough to please him. The advance was in a square; with what colour of tactical reasoning should or could one side advance more quickly than another, when in front of it lie concealed groups of the enemy, causing local checks, fluctuations, and gaps in the line,—an evil to be sedulously avoided when opposed to a wily enemy, eagerly anticipating such openings by which to penetrate in mass? To do so would be to sacrifice the advantages of training and armament, to oppose spear with bayonet, instead of bullet. Behold the sequel to this in the subsequent battle of Tamasi! Gen. Graham and Staff are on the right angle of the square. The 42nd form the left angle; a short distance in front are thousands of the brave, fanatical foe; nevertheless, the 42nd receives the order to charge: 'Theirs not to reason why, theirs but to do, or die!' We all now know how this was carried out, and the results. For some inexplicable reason, the 65th, immediately under the eye of the General, did not charge at the same time, nor was the 42nd charge retarded when this was observed; hence a concerted and coherent impulse was not given to the mass, as was evidenced by the results. From precedent, the dictates of common-sense should have foreseen that the enemy would, when so close, likewise charge. This occurred, and the gaps incidental to the disjointed action which necessarily supervened, from some one's fault, were promptly filled by the enemy, with the painful result that, unnecessarily, 66 men of the 42nd lie stiff and cold on the battle-field. I do not wish to be hypercritical. I admire Gen. Graham for his manifold good points; he is a gentleman and gallant soldier. I do not desire to allude to the proverb of beams and motes, but I do think that it was superfluous and uncalled-for to advertise prejudiciously, with its mouth closed, a corps which has always been Scotland's pride, and whose undeniable pluck at the last fight was conducive in great degree to prevent a disaster. Nevertheless, I congratulate the commander on the issue of a creditable campaign to the British Army, as also on his escape from the agile Arab, who scaled his horse's quarters, but who, the British public were pleased to observe, was frightened away by a back view of our new great General."

The deceased entered the Army April 21, 1846; became lieut., Jan. 21, 1848; capt., March 9, 1858; major, Jan. 6, 1872; lieut.-col., Dec. 25, 1857; and col., March 6, 1880. RIFLE BRIGADE. Gen. Sir G. Buller, G.C.B., senior colonel-commandant, died on Saturday, in Bruton Street. The late general was the third son of the late Gen. F. W. Buller, and entered the Rifle Brigade in March, 1820. He became lieut.-col. in 1841, commanded the 1st Batn. in the Kaffir War of 1846-47, and commanded one of the columns which entered the Amatloa mountains in the campaign of 1847 against the Gaika Chief Sandilla, who surrendered himself to him. He commanded the troops under Sir Harry Smith, which crossed the Orange river in 1848 to suppress the insurrection of the Dutch Boers (severely wounded); was engaged in all the operations in the Waterklooff in 1852-53; and as colonel on the staff commanded the 1st Division of the Army until the close of the Kaffir War. In April, 1854, he embarked for the East, having been appointed to the command of a brigade of the Light Division, and took part in the battles of Alma and Inkerman, at the latter of which two horses were killed under him, and he was wounded. He continued to serve at the siege of Sebastopol till May, 1855 (K.C.B., promoted to the rank of major-general, Commander of the Legion of Honour, 2nd Class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal). In Aug. 1856, he was appointed to command the troops in the Ionian Islands. He was Lieutenant-Governor of Portsmouth in command of the South-West District from 1865 to Aug. 1870. He was promoted to the rank of lieut.-gen. Nov. 9, 1862, and gen. Oct. 25, 1871, and had been a colonel-commandant of the Rifle Brigade since Oct. 1860.

The Auxiliary Forces.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

MIDDLESEX. The detachment of this regiment which succeeded on Good Friday in capturing a picket of the Hampshire Yeomanry and the convoy which they were escorting, were quartered for that night at Rowlands Castle, on the left front of Col. Moncrieff's line of pickets. On Saturday morning, in pursuance of the orders they had received from the officer commanding the marching columns, they marched to Waterloo; then, throwing out a service advanced guard, they proceeded across country, viâ Newland Farm to Purbrook Heath, and thence along the lanes towards Hookheath Farm to watch the country on the extreme right of Col. Moncrieff's advance. They had hardly passed Purbrook Heath before the officer in command had to report to Col. Moncrieff that he had encountered the enemy's vedettes in the shape of small parties of the 4th Dragoon Guards, whose intention evidently was to work round towards Furzley Corner, and fall upon the right flank of the advancing column. But the Dragoons soon found that their enemy was not so much to be despised as they probably had anticipated; and when the Yeomanry patrol, which was despatched towards Furzley Corner, returned, they found that three parties of the Royal Irish in succession, a serjeant and two troopers, an officer, and a party of nine, and a non-commissioned officer's party of six, with their respective horses, had been taken prisoners by their comrades. In reporting these captures, the officer in command of the Yeomanry was able to add that a dismounted party of the enemy's signallers, three in number, had also fallen into his hands, and that he was at the same time keeping touch of the Hampshire Yeomanry on his left, so that Col. Moncrieff had reason to feel that the right of his advance was tolerably well secured. As the columns moved on, a company of the Queen's Westminster Volunteers was detailed to occupy the position which the Middlesex Yeomanry had held throughout the morning, and the 21 prisoners captured by the Yeomen were handed over to their custody for the rest of the day. The detachment was then kept in reserve in rear of the centre of Col. Moncrieff's line of attack till the conclusion of the day's operations, when the men were marched to the quarters which they occupied for the next three days in Hilsea Barracks. The detachment only numbered 25 sabres, including the officer in command, Capt. Bickersteth, and Lieut. Ingram.

MILITIA.

WEST RIDING REGIMENT. Col. F. C. Wemyss, of her Majesty's Bodyguard, youngest son of the late Gen. Wemyss, C.B., Col. 17th Regt., has succeeded Col. Bayly, retired, as lieut.-col. commandant.

3RD AND 4TH BATTALIONS, WORCESTERSHIRE REGIMENT. The camping-ground at Norton, near Worcester, is being considerably improved, and before the 3rd Batn. assembles in June, a wooden mess-hut and ante-room for the officers, and a wooden canteen, 80 ft. long, for the men, will be erected. The canteen is erected by the funds of the regimental canteen, supplemented by subscriptions from the officers. The whole thing was finally settled before Easter at a meeting at Worcester, at which the following field-officers attended:—Col. Norbury, and Majors Allsopp, Webb, and Hill. Capt. Holden has been appointed Assistant Secretary to the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the housing of the working-classes; he recently served in Scotland in a similar capacity to the Royal Commission on the Highland crofters and cotters. Lieut. Lord passed first in the recent competitive examination amongst Militia officers for commissions in the Cavalry and Infantry. The other officers who have been successful in the same examination are Lieut. J. Little and Lieut. J. Davies, who has been acting as Aide-de-Camp to his father, Col. Davies, Grenadier Guards, commanding the attacking force of Volunteers at the Easter Manœuvres at Dover. Lieut. Murray is about to exchange into the Essex Regt.

Of the 172 regiments of Militia to be called out for training in the United Kingdom this year, over 80 will go into camp for the full period of 27 days. The preliminary training for 56 days of the recruits has now begun in the case of 69 regiments in Great Britain and of 23 in Ireland. Only five corps are already out for regimental training, the principal part of this work being as usual reserved for the summer months. In Great Britain, the total number of corps out will be 127, viz., 21 brigades of artillery, three corps of engineers, and 103 battalions of infantry; and in Ireland, 45, viz., 14 brigades of artillery and 31 battalions of infantry. With the exception of four regiments, all the regimental trainings will be for 27 days. The exceptions are the Durham Artillery, who go to Dover for 34 days in June; the Anglesey Engineers, 42 days; the Hampshire Engineers, 56 days; and the Monmouthshire Engineers, 41 days. Eight corps will proceed to Aldershot, and among the other camping places are Shorncliffe, Altcar, St. Anne's-on-Sea, Southport, Hounslow Heath, Leigh, Lanark Muir, the Curragh, Wicklow, Londonderry, Omagh, and Armagh. One brigade of artillery, the Clare, will train at Portsmouth.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

22ND MIDDLESEX (CENTRAL LONDON RANGERS). The machine-gun detachment of this corps had the honour of being inspected by H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief on Saturday, April 12, on Portsdown Hill, when No. 1 gun of the half-battery of Nordenfelts attached to the regiment was put through its drill. The Duke of Cambridge then most minutely examined the gun, and the carriage invented by Col. Alt on which it is mounted. His Royal Highness was pleased to express his high approval both of the gun and carriage, stating that, with the 5,000 rounds carried in the magazine-carriage, the gun became a most formidable weapon,—"a regular bullet-pump." The Duke then complimented the gun-squad on the smart manner in which they had worked their gun during the day, and informed Col. Alt that he considered the drill simple and good.

"EX FUMO."

"Cloud-capped Olympus" writes:—"We continually hear complaints of soldiers smoking pipes in public. Now, it is rather hard on Tommy Atkins, who, unlike his officer, has no means of getting out of uniform when he wishes to smoke. Again, when Tommy is in full marching-order and marching 'at ease,' he is allowed to blow his baccy, but when he is really at ease and out for a walk he must not smoke. Now, why do not the Government supply, or permit the supply, of a sealed-pattern wooden pipe? Such an article, of mayal wood or briar, might easily be supplied by the thousand, and of a uniform pattern, with attached cover, and at a very low rate, say, 3d. each. Then there would be no excuse for the soldier to smoke any but a regulation pipe when in uniform, and the feelings of civilians and non-smokers would be spared the sight of 'meerschaums on the lees,' or clays anywhere. The pipe might be shown at kit inspections, and rank after the knife, fork, and spoon."

On vacating the post of Governor and Commandant of the Royal Victoria Hospital, Sir C. Pearson issued the following farewell order:—"(From Departmental Orders, Netley, March 31, 1884.)—VI. THE CHANNEL SQUADRON.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Phalerum Bay, Athens, Thursday, April 10.

Having completed with coal, and filled up with provisions from the Tyne, the Squadron left Suda Bay, Crete, on Tuesday forenoon, April 1. The Tyne left in the morning for Alexandria. The Alexandra still remained at anchor, but was expecting to receive orders very shortly for Malta. It was made known before we left that the two divisions of the Squadron were going to separate, as invalids, time-expired men, &c., from the first division were sent to the Agincourt for passage to Malta. We weighed at 9 a.m., and stood out of the harbour in port group formation, the groups in line ahead. When we were clear of the land, the second division parted company, and shaped course for Malta. The first division proceeded to Phalerum Bay, where they arrived at 4 p.m. the next day, having encountered a strong head wind all the way. They came-to in line abreast, the flagship in the middle. The Forward accompanied the first division. Saturday last being the day of the funeral of the late Duke of Albany, a funeral service was held at half-past 11 at the English church at Athens. It was attended by the King and Queen of Greece, the Duke of Edinburgh, the Grand Duke Paul of Russia (who is on a visit to the King and Queen), the captains of the ships of the Squadron, and a large number of officers, officials, and others. In the evening, for an hour and a half before sunset, minute guns were fired by the Squadron, each ship firing 30. At the conclusion, the bands played the National Anthem, and the Royal standard, which had been flying half-mast high on board the flagship, was hauled down. The Grand Duke Paul visited the Squadron yesterday. He went on board each ship, and saw them at general quarters. When he left the flagship, the ships dressed with mast-head flags, Russian at main, and fired Royal salutes together. The first division leave this evening, at half-past five, for Malta.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 19, 1884.

WE have frequently most strongly recommended the trials with the view of testing the capabilities of Machine-guns for the purposes of Indian warfare. We notice that Lieutenant-General Hardinge, accompanied by his Adjutant-General, Brigadier-General Annesley, has lately been attending experiments at Poona. Whatever may be the opinion of artillerists as regards the employment of machine-guns with troops in the field, the value of this gun in a country like India must be admitted; and any steps taken by the Indian Military authorities to secure for the machine-gun a recognised place in the armament of hill stations and the various strategic points throughout the country, will be a guarantee that they are alive to the necessity which exists for increasing watchfulness. The particulars of the recent experiments are very interesting, and demonstrate the improvements which this armament has undergone since the French first brought it into notice in the campaign of 1870-71. It should be remembered that the machine-gun is a weapon which could be easily worked by the local Volunteers. Volunteer battalions and companies exist at all the principal towns in India. If the idea we put forward in these columns sometime ago was carried out, and each of these corps was given machine-guns, and practised their use, instead of devoting themselves exclusively to the details of barrack-square drills, much would be done to guard against such a rising as that which occurred in 1857. All the leading authorities in India—Sir Donald Stewart, Sir F. Roberts, and General Hardinge—have recognised the soundness of these views. We trust, therefore, yet to see our ideas realised, for, apart from all difference of opinion, as the merits of one system over another, the fact remains that the machine-gun is a weapon which is easily handled and manœuvred. It is, in fact, just the thing wanted to popularise volunteering among European residents in India, and at the same time to add materially to our strength.

It is said that Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar is to move from Portsmouth to the Royal Hospital, Kilmainham. If so, we hope he will do as well in Dublin as he did in High Street. Sir T. Steele's time will be up in October, 1885. A little idle or indolent, but never found wanting in times of great trial, he has justified in Dublin the favour which secured to him a long term of Staff employ. Perhaps he may now give a hand to Mr. Kinglake, and help him to finish the last volume of "The Crimean War" ere the century closes.

There is said to be a little friction at Pall Mall respecting the appointment to the personal Staff at the Horse Guards. It will probably be alleviated presently.

Who is responsible for the Artillery moves just ordered amongst the field batteries? Instead of moving batteries that have been at out-stations for some years to Aldershot and Woolwich, and sending others from head-quarters to take their places, the principle adhered to is apparently to change from out-station to out-station. We will take, for instance, H Battery, 2nd Brigade, at Bristol. After some years in Ireland, it was moved to Bristol in 1882; and it is now ordered to Sheffield! Again, a battery from the last-named place is moved to Bristol; and to crown the sagacity displayed in the orders issued, D Battery, 3rd Brigade, which marched from Chatham to Ipswich in 1881, is now to move back again to Chatham from Ipswich. It is lucky for the Cavalry and Infantry that they are not ruled in the same way as the Royal Regiment of Artillery.

Sir John Adye is "maturing" by age towards the ripeness of retirement. It is not his own petard which is hoisting the Artilleryman, but it is the petard which was prepared for others which is about to go off under the Convent at Gibraltar in indiscriminating explosion. And yet, truth to tell, Sir John Adye is not too old to be very fit for the work to be done at the Rock.

Instructions have been given that in future General Courts-martial will not be convened for the trial of men, under Sec. 32 of the Army Act, 1881, who have re-enlisted after being discharged from the Army as incorrigible and worthless, or because of conviction of felony, or of a sentence of penal servitude. It is stated that the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has been thus enabled to order a relaxation of the severe course laid down in the instructions contained in Horse Guards Circular Memorandum of January 31, 1882, on this subject, owing to the desired effect having been obtained, judging by the marked decrease in the number of General Courts-martial held in the United Kingdom during the past year.

Colonel Innes, Inspector-General of Military Works in India, has, we hear, been deputed to visit Aden, in his capacity as a member of the Defence Committee, in order to examine the existing fortifications, in connection with the new scheme of defence proposed for that fortress, which, we are glad to say, is to be carried out forthwith.

Madame la Baronne Daumesnil has just died in Paris, at the ripe old age of 90 years. She was the widow of the celebrated veteran whose statue stands in an avenue of his name, which leads to Vincennes. The gallant old soldier lost a leg during the First Empire, and was afterwards appointed by Napoleon Commandant of Vincennes. When the Emperor was forced to abdicate, in 1814, General Daumesnil positively refused to surrender. "Give me back my leg," he said to the allies, "and I will open the gates." As the allies could not restore the limb in question, the gallant Jambe de Bois, as he was ever afterwards called, kept his gates closed, in spite of threats and entreaties, to the great exasperation of the allies, who at one moment thought of laying siege to the place. There now remains in France, we believe, only one more relict whose name takes us back to the great wars of the First Empire—we allude to the widow of Marshal Suchet, who is now verging on 100 years of age.

The rumour that the Viceroy will soon quit India is again renewed by the Indian Press, but we are assured that nothing is known at the India Office to justify the report.

The visit of Lieutenant-General Sir William Jervoise, the Governor of New Zealand, to South Island lately, was, we understand, taken advantage of by Major Cautley, R.E., who has been commissioned by the home Government to inspect the sea-boards and coast-lines, with the view to the construction of defence works, to confer with the General as to the best positions to erect forts, lay torpedoes, and do all things necessary for destroying an enemy's ships and armaments. Nothing, as yet, has been allowed to transpire which tends to indicate the course Sir William Jervoise recommends to be adopted, but it is known that he went very thoroughly into the matter.

Lieutenant F. Hammersley, 20th Foot, has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to Major-General T. C. Lyons, C.B., commanding 1st Brigade at Aldershot.

The battalions ordered home from India next relief season are the 1st Batn. 18th Royal Irish, 44th Essex Regiment, and 70th East Surrey Regiment. They will be replaced by their sister battalions, all of which are at present abroad, viz., the 2nd Batn. 18th Royal Irish and the 31st East Surrey in the Mediterranean, and the 56th Essex in Egypt. The present complications in Egypt are not likely to alter this arrangement, whatever it may do with the following year's reliefs, for which the Horse Guards have down the 40th South Lancashire, 43rd Oxfordshire Light Infantry, and 68th Durham Light Infantry.

We understand that the Duke of Connaught was offered the command of the Sirhind Division when Lieutenant-General Hughes vacated the appointment, but he preferred to remain at Meerut.

Inquiries are often made as to what has become of the old Regimental Baggage Fund. This fund, we may point out, was created under the following circumstances:—Under Article 36, page 2, of the Royal Warrant of 1848, a commuted mileage allowance was given for the carriage of regimental baggage. Any savings over the amount actually expended were carried to a regimental baggage fund, which was charged with such payments as the travelling expenses of women not on the married establishment and of children on a regiment proceeding to India; the balance of the Baggage Fund was called in, the amount being refunded on its return to England. The Warrant of 1848 having been cancelled, the Secretary of State for War was called upon to decide what should be done with £1,846 19s. 5d., the balance of the Fund which remained in his hands, and this has been invested in 3 per Cent. Consols, for the benefit of soldiers' widows.

According to existing arrangements, the 52nd Oxfordshire Light Infantry and the 82nd South Lancashire Regiment will proceed to the Mediterranean next winter.

The death of Colonel the Duke of Buccleuch, 3rd Battalion, Royal Scots, has created a vacancy among the Queen's Aides-de-Camp. His Grace was the Senior Aide-de-Camp, in which position he is succeeded by Colonel Lord Winmarleigh, 3rd Battalion, Loyal North Lancashire Regiment. Colonel Lord Lovat, 2nd Battalion, Cameron Highlanders, will fill the vacancy on the list of Militia Aides-de-Camp.

The valise equipment business seems to be again shelved for an indefinite period. Nothing is heard of it at Aldershot now, and all experiments in this direction have ceased. The opinion of experienced medical officers, who tested the equipment of 1883, was decidedly against it. Thus matters came to a dead-lock, where they remain.

A correspondent entitled to consideration observes:—"It has been stated that, that commanding officers will be considered most deserving and efficient who can pass the largest number of recruits through his hands for shipment to the foreign battalion in the shortest possible time, and yet it will hardly be believed that the authorities throw the greatest obstacle in the way of these lads being rendered fit for service. We allude to the constant drain on the home battalions of their non-commissioned officers. Incessant shouting on the parade-ground at crowds of half-grown boys is not the most pleasant of occupations, and very naturally the non-commissioned officer of eight or ten years' standing endeavours, if he possibly can, to escape at the very earliest opportunity, to the otium cum dignitate of the Auxiliary Forces, a proceeding which our political rulers at the War Office foster and encourage by every means and regulation in their power; nor do they rest content here, for the few among the recruits who, more intelligent than the rest, have been given a lance-stripe, and are in process of being fashioned into non-commissioned officers, are also swept up and hurried away with the 'draft to the other battalion,' where they are not in the very least required, as every one who has soldiered in India or other foreign stations well knows that there is no dearth of candidates for the stripes in those parts of the world. It cannot be supposed that the Adjutant-General really believes that the recruit after three months at the depôt is fit to join the ranks of the home battalion, and yet this constant thinning of the 'teaching' ranks of a regiment would seem to show it."

Nine retired officers of the Army Pay Department are employed at Woolwich, Edinburgh, Dublin, York, London Recruiting District, Royal Artillery, Portsmouth, and the Regimental Districts at Lancaster, Derby, and Devizes. Besides the above, thirty-four regiments require Paymasters.

Many people talk of "Crawfurd's famous march," or the "famous march of the Light Division," without knowing exactly what the words mean. A writer in a weekly paper speaks of it as the "wonderful forced march which alone saved one of Wellington's most dearly bought victories from being turned to possible, if not absolutely certain, defeat." The Battle of Talavera was fought on July 28, 1808; on that day General Crawfurd was bivouacked with the 43rd, 52nd, and 95th Regiments at Malpartida de Plascencia, which he had reached after a march of twenty miles, when fugitives from Talavera, "not all Spaniards," says Napier, appeared, announcing the defeat of Wellington. Now, what happened was this. Allowing his men some hours to rest, Crawfurd, after weeding the Brigade of some 50 of the weaker vessels, set out, and never stayed his steps till he halted his column on the field of Talavera, and at once took charge of the outposts, on the afternoon of July 29. In 26 hours, in the hottest season of the year, he had passed over 62 miles, each man carrying from 50 to 60 lbs. weight on his back. The victory, however, was complete, and though the French took up a position at Albreche on the 29th-30th, it was done not to dispute the field, but to cover their retrograde movement.

We would again call the attention of the War Office to the increasing length of time officers are kept waiting to be gazetted, months after vacancies have occurred, which, to say the least, is hard, and certainly not tending to the good of the service, and shows an apathy which is scarcely consistent in a public department.

The news of Prince Leopold's death was received by the services and by the British colony in Egypt with great sorrow, and the day of the funeral was observed at the garrison stations as if Egypt were a British possession. The Egyptian Gazette says:—"In accordance with orders received from London, 60 minute-guns were fired before sunset on Saturday from the Cairo Citadel. Thirty guns were also fired from each of her Majesty's ships of war in Alexandria Harbour the same afternoon, a similar number of guns being fired from Kom-el-Dick Fort, where the Royal Standard was hoisted to half-mast at 2.30 p.m. precisely, and remained flying till sunset, the incident being commented on by many natives, who, till they were informed of the reason why it was displayed, imagined that it was the symbol of the declaration of a British Protectorate. This was the first occasion on which a British flag has been seen flying over an Egyptian fort." The ships of war and the forts at Suakim, and the troops at Port Said and Suez, paid similar tokens of respect to the memory of his late Royal Highness. The consular flags were generally at half-mast, but there were some exceptions.

The present service mode of picketing horses in the mounted branches having been found faulty, a thorough trial will be made, during the ensuing summer, of a system recently introduced on the Continent, which is said to be more effective than any other.

The Army Temperance Union, which is announced to be on the basis of and in tenour with the Church of England Temperance Society, is in need of funds, and as the Union is intended to promote temperance—in other words, to check drunkenness, which is the nursing mother of three-fourths of the offences for which soldiers are punished and lose caste—we cannot, as long as its operations are conducted under the sanction of the Commanding Officers and the Chaplains, refrain from wishing it success and large support. On the provisional committee, of which the chairman is Colonel Geary, R.A., we recognise the names of excellent officers and exemplary chaplains, and of one serjeant-major. The secretary is Major Courtney Clarke, Royal Fusiliers.

"One Who Knows," referring to "W. H. C.'s" crux, observes that a captain 20 years with a regiment, and then three years on half-pay, has not 23 years' service as defined in the preamble to the Royal Warrant.

EGYPTIAN TROOPS.

"T. R. S." says:—"In the Cairo telegram of the Standard of March 31, I observe the following:—'Two battalions of the Egyptian Army, under English officers, are to be sent to garrison Suakim.' I have no immediate means of ascertaining the trustworthiness of this piece of information, living as I do in a remote part of France, but I have no hesitation in saying that, if true, it is simply suicidal. Can nothing make our rulers see that Egyptian troops are utterly unreliable? I do not so much allude to their want of courage, as I think that troops of a very inferior quality may, by discipline, be taught to fight more or less well; but is not the fact perfectly evident that all their feelings are against us, and in favour of our enemies? I believe the result of leaving Suakim garrisoned by Egyptian troops would be that Osman Digna would open communications with the garrison, and they would accept his terms, and give up the place and their English officers to him. This will, I firmly believe, actually happen, and be a beautiful wind-up to our imbecile treatment of Egyptian affairs. A couple of Indian regiments would make all safe at Suakim, and to give up, for some years at least, the idea of an Egyptian Army seems to me an absolute necessity, and in the end the cheapest way of bringing matters to a settlement."

BAD FOR MAN AND HORSE.

"A Trooper" writes:—"We are at present quartered in a certain town in the North of Ireland, where there is a manège never to be forgotten by any one who has ever ridden upon it; and as it is the only substitute for a riding-school, a great deal of work has to be done within its precincts. It is situated on ground sloping at about 3°, so that it is not a safe place for either men or horses to manœuvre upon. The down-hill work plays fast and loose with the horses' legs, and the men are liable to be ruptured, if much riding without stirrups is indulged in. The ground, moreover, after heavy rains is in a worse state than any country lane after a thaw, and is full of large stones, which plays sad havoc with horses which have tender feet. At present a squad is undergoing an annual course of equitation, and to see the state in which the rough rider sends them to their stables after the riding-school lesson is over would move the sternest heart. I was watching them the other morning from the barrack-room window, and saw the rough rider trotting and cantering the ride for one whole hour, with only one short easy; as soon, however, as the captain made his appearance, 'walk' was the order. During this hour one man and horse fell, owing to the ride being turned three times in succession on this uneven ground. At mid-day stables three more were reported as injured in various ways, owing to this manège. Not long ago, two men were invalided from this corps, on account of being made to ride without stirrups for a long period. The ground could be levelled for not a large sum, and it would, I am sure, not cost much to erect a light zinc roof, to keep the rain off."

The report that a fatal case of cholera had occurred on board her Majesty's Indian troopship Crocodile in the Suez Canal was exaggerated. The patient is now much better. The doctors declare that the case is of no importance, being only of a sporadic character.

The Duke of Edinburgh bade farewell to the Greek Court, and took his departure from Athens on April 10. King George accompanied his distinguished guest as far as Phalera, while the Ministers and Corps Diplomatique attended his Royal Highness to the railway-station. Altogether, the Duke's visit to Greece has been a great success, the reception he found being most flattering. His Royal Highness has left a donation of 11,000 francs to the Women's Hospital, which has recently been built under the auspices of the Queen. The Duke proceeded direct to Malta.

The members of the Royal Naval Club, 1765, dined together at Willis's Rooms on Tuesday last to commemorate Lord Rodney's action, April 12, 1782. Vice-Admiral D. Robertson Macdonald presided. > 55A.—The Committee may, with the sanction of a resolution of the Society in general meeting, out of the profits carry over to a separate account, to be called "The Deferred Bonus Account," or such other name as the Committee shall think fit, any sum they may think proper to be allotted to the shareholders in proportion to their shares, and to be payable upon such contingency or contingencies, either separately affecting the respective shareholders (as, e.g., the respective deaths of the existing shareholders at the date of the resolution), or otherwise, as shall by the resolution be determined, and so that the several parts of the fund so carried over shall, so long as the same remain unpaid, bear interest at such rate as may be determined.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

COUGHS,
COLDS,
ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.
Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See the Times, July 13th, 1864.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the true Palliative in

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC for CHOLERA, DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of Diarrhœa."

From SYMES and CO., Simla:

Dear Sir,—We congratulate you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, his Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations. Of all Chemists, 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, and 4s 6d.

PROSPECTUS.

BY a Decree of the Imperial Government of Brazil, dated September 29, 1883, and signed by H.M. the Emperor of Brazil, the statutes of the Minas Central Railway of Brazil were approved, and a further Imperial Decree, of October 6, 1883, empowered the Company to transact business in the Empire, and conceded to the same authority to take certain national lands, without payment, in addition to the advantages already conferred by the Concessions of November 18, 1881, June 22, 1882, and October 6, 1882.

This Company was constituted on April 25, 1883, for the purpose of acquiring Concessions, rights, and subventions, granted in respect of a railway from the most convenient point of the Dom Pedro Segundo State Railway to the city of Pitanguy, thus carrying out an important object of the Imperial Government of Brazil, namely, to create railway communication between Rio de Janeiro, the capital of the Empire, and the San Francisco River. Such is the importance the authorities attach to this line that already a further Concession has been granted for its extension from Pitanguy to San Antonio dos Patos, on the Paranahyba River, and a glance at the accompanying map will show that by means of this extension two of the most important water highways in the Empire, namely, the San Francisco and Paranahyba Rivers, are connected with each other, and both placed in direct communication with the Imperial capital, Rio de Janeiro, as well as with Santos.

The surveys, plans, and estimates for the whole of the first section having been approved by the Government of Minas Geraes, the latter has authorised this present issue, which will absorb the whole of the Preference Share Capital of the Company. It is expected that the first section of the Railway (about 56 kilometres) will be opened for traffic early next year.

The Concessions empowering the construction of the line of the Minas Central Railway of Brazil are respectively dated November 18, 1881, June 22, 1882, and October 6, 1882. By virtue of the same an annual sum amounting to 6 per cent. in gold, on a sum of £1,012,500, or equal to £60,750, in gold, is guaranteed for thirty years; of this guarantee an annual sum of £21,875 will be set aside for the service of interest on the present issue, leaving the Company an annual net balance of £38,875 to deal with. Of the whole of the Ordinary or Deferred Shares (which do not participate in the guarantee), a sum of £300,000 will be accepted in lieu of cash by the Contractors in part payment of the amount payable to them under their contract.

TERMS OF CONCESSIONS.

The Government concede (inter alia) the following important privileges:—

(A) A monopoly for fifty years, during which term no competing railway will be allowed to be constructed within 30 kilometres on either side of the railway. The monopoly will, however, continue in perpetuity, if the Company repays to the Government within one year from the date of the termination of the concession, the amount of interest paid in respect of its guarantee, together with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum, together with the amount of any payments made by the Government on account of the Company.

(B) Guarantee of £60,750 per annum in gold for thirty years from the construction of the line (being calculated at the rate of 6 per cent. on 9,000,000$,000), at the fixed rate of exchange of 2s 3d per milreis.

(C) Guarantee of interest during construction on the amounts expended in each year.

(D) Power to create Ordinary Share Capital in excess of the Capital of 9,000 contos, or £1,012,500.

The Population of the province of Minas Geraes, 1,300,000 in 1862, was 1,5000,000 in 1872, and now amounts to about 2,000,000, or more than one-sixth of the whole population of the Brazilian Empire. Its area is 230,000 square miles. It possesses its own provincial legislature, empowered to levy taxes and to make laws for provincial purposes, and its assessable value is estimated by the Commendator Domingos Moitinho, at £300,000,000, whereas the taxes hitherto raised for revenue purposes only amount to about £300,000 per annum. It will thus be seen that ample security exists for the payment of the guarantee now given.

It is noteworthy that in almost every instance the money for the construction of lines built with Brazilian Capital has been raised on the security of Provincial Guarantees of Interest, which fact sufficiently proves that, in the opinion of those best able to judge, viz., the Brazilians themselves, these Provincial Government Guarantees offer every security to investors.

MR. CHARLES WARING, in his admirable essay on "Brazil and her Railways," in the Fortnightly Review of March, 1883 (after referring to the Dom Pedro Segundo and other trunk lines), says:—

> "After the complete opening of these trunk lines, about 1862, the second group or series was commenced. This consists of an entire network of provincial lines, forming extensions and branches of the main lines, and constructed by Brazilian enterprise and Brazilian capital, without any Imperial guarantee. In some instances, however, the Companies enjoy provincial guarantees of a moderate amount. Of these railways, established without Imperial aid, details would occupy much space and would scarcely help our enquiry. I must be content, therefore, to say of them that many of the lines are now earning from 7 to 10 per cent. on their capital, and that the total length is 2,305 miles, of which 1,382 miles are in operation, and 923 miles under construction."

EXTENSION of DOM PEDRO II. RAILWAY SYSTEM.

The Line owned by the Minas Central Railway of Brazil, Limited, will be a highly important feeder or extension of the Dom Pedro II. system. The latter is one of the most successful as well as one of the most promising Railway undertakings in Brazil; its traffic returns have increased steadily from £543,000 in 1871, to £1,300,000 in 1881, while the per-centage of working expenses has decreased from £43 to £42 per cent., as published in the Government returns. There is every reason to anticipate that a very large share of this prosperity will fall to this Company's Line.

The rapid development of late years of the resources of the Empire of Brazil (as proved by official statistics) is mainly attributable to the judicious fostering of railway enterprise by the Brazilian Government. Concessions have been granted only for lines of which the public utility has been fully ascertained and the returns from which might be reasonably expected to render the undertaking a safe and profitable investment for capital. The fruits of this enlightened policy are shown in the high premiums which Brazilian Railway Stocks command on the markets of the world.

RESULTS OF EXISTING EXTENSIONS OF DOM PEDRO II. SYSTEM

The present Company's line is in every respect similar to the San Paulo, and Rio de Janeiro and Leopoldina Railways, all three lines connecting the Dom Pedro Segundo Railway with a fertile province.

Although the Shares of the San Paulo and Rio de Janeiro Railway are not held in this country, its 6 per cent. Debentures are quoted on the London Stock Exchange at £3½ to £4½ premium, and as regards the Leopoldina Railway (whose capital is entirely held in Brazil) it appears that the ordinary Shares received, in 1881, dividends equal to 30 per cent., the Annual Traffic Returns showing an increase of 10 per cent. over the preceding year.

The present Concessions have been the subject of long and exhaustive enquiry on the part of the provincial government, and the decision to charge the revenue with the above-mentioned guarantee was only taken when the value of the proposed line had been fully established.

PRICES OF SHARES OF BRAZILIAN AND ARGENTINE RAILWAYS.

The following are the quotations of the principal Brazilian and Argentine Railway Shares issued in this country:—

COST OF CONSTRUCTION.

The line is to be completed in accordance with the terms of the Concessions for the total sum of £1,192,500 (of which £300,000 will be paid in Ordinary or Deferred Shares), which includes cost of Concessions, purchase of land, and rolling stock. The Railway will be handed over to the Company in complete working order, and the sums necessary for payment of interest during construction will (pending their discharge by the Government) be retained out of the contract price.

The total cost per mile being about £8,000, compares favourably with other Brazilian railways, owing to the easy gradients and general nature of the country through which the line passes, and the consequent avoidance of the great engineering difficulties with which other railways in Brazil have had to contend.

The following Contracts have been entered into by the Company, namely:—

A Contract dated April 23, 1883, and made between Joseph Steinert as trustee, on behalf of the Company, of the first part, the Brazilian Railways Construction Corporation, Limited, of the second part, and Messrs. Ross and Mathews, Contractors of Public Works, of the third part. Two Contracts dated May 8, 1883, made between the Brazilian Railways Construction Corporation, Limited, of the one part, and the Company, of the other part. An Assignment dated May 18, 1883, made between the Brazilian Railways Construction Corporation, Limited, of the first part, Carlos Theodoro de Bustamante of the second part, and the Company, of the third part.

The following further Contracts refer to the Concession or Company, viz.:—A Contract, dated December 23, 1882, made between Senhor Francisco Jose Pedro Lessa, of the first part, Dr. Carlos Theodoro de Bustamante, of the second part, Charles Hemsworth Linklater, of the third part, and Gustav Unger, as Trustee on behalf of the Brazilian Railways Construction Corporation, Limited, of the fourth part. Two Contracts, dated respectively April 25, 1883, and February 15, 1884, made between the Messrs. Ross and Mathews and the Brazilian Railways Construction Corporation, Limited.

Application for Shares must be made on the accompanying form, accompanied by a deposit of £1, for each Share applied for; the payments will be received by the Company's Bankers, or by the Brokers, and at the Offices of the Company.

In case a smaller number of Shares than applied for be allotted, the surplus of the deposit will be applied towards payment of amount due on allotment.

Where no allotment is made, the deposit will be returned without reduction.

Copies of the Concessions, and of the Memorandum and Articles of Association, and of the Contracts entered into by the Company, may be seen at the Offices of the Solicitors of the Company.

London, April 17, 1884.

The following is a copy of the letter of his Excellency the Imperial Brazilian Minister, addressed to the Directors of the Company:—

"Gentlemen, "Brazilian Legation, London, April 24, 1883.

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of this date, asking me whether, in granting Concessions for Railways within its Territory and guaranteeing Interest upon their Capital, a Province in Brazil acts within its powers.

In reply, I have to state that the Constitution and Laws of Brazil allow the Legislative Assembly of a Province, with the sanction of the President of the Province, to grant Concessions for Railways in its own jurisdiction, and to guarantee Capital invested thereon.

I have the honour, Gentlemen, to be,
Your obedient Servant,
'PENEDO.'

To the Directors of the Minas Central Railway of Brazil, Limited."

THE VOLUNTEER MANŒUVRES.

FIELD-DAY AT PORTSMOUTH.

It is generally admitted that whatever may be said about the sham-fight at Portsmouth on Monday as a lesson in tactics for the Volunteers, as a military pageant the Review showed a great advance on the part of the Volunteers in steadiness and discipline in the field and in their bearing at the march-past. Putting aside all strategical suppositions, there was a small garrison at Hilsea supposed to be in danger from a northern force, which consisted of two divisions. But it expected help from the western force, which had only one strong division. This was to advance from the west and join hands, if possible, with the garrison, which was to make a sally. The northern force was commanded by Major-Gen. White; the western by Major-Gen. the Hon. R. Monck. The strength of the former was about 10,635 Volunteers, and of the latter 9,376, of whom 6,826 were Volunteers, the rest being furnished by the Regular troops in garrison at Portsmouth. Gen. White had issued orders to the effect that as soon as the signal-gun fired, his battery of heavy guns was to move across the open gorse land, and plough across the northern slope of Portsdown, and out of sight of the Hilsea garrison. These guns were to gain the Portsmouth High Road between Christ Church and the George Inn, ascend it, turn sharp to the right, and continue along the road on the top of the ridge. Here two guns were to be detached, to come into action somewhere above the Chalk Pit and to the right of the tea-gardens, where they would be supported by one brigade, the whole being intended to hold Hilsea in check. Meanwhile, the main body of his force, having its left flank thus protected, was to move along in the hollow behind Portsdown, and still on its northern side it was to continue the forward movement until it came into contact with the battery, which, it was expected, would be somewhere near Pigeon-House Farm. Gen. Monck had resolved when the signal-gun fired to make for Hilsea, viâ Wymering and Cosham, as fast as he could move. His orders were, therefore, in furtherance of this intention. His whole force was to advance in a direct échelon of brigades from the right, that of Moncrieff leading, with Ranelagh next, both down in the flat lands to the south of Portsdown. Then Panter came along the crest, but also on the inner side, while Meade's brigade of Regulars was in reserve. The signal-gun having fired, the Middlesex Yeomanry dashed out to get touch of the enemy. Next to them went a battery of heavy guns, whose movements excited the admiration of the Duke of Cambridge. "Away to their right (a correspondent says) was the whole of White's force, less one brigade. Gen. Fielding's division led the way, W. Fitzroy's brigade leading. Then came Webber's, then G. P. Fitzroy's. Behind all was Bury's brigade, the first of the 2nd Division, the second, under Warren, moving along the top of the crest, where it was to take post with the two guns at the Chalk Pit. The guns soon got into position and opened fire, while the rest of the battery moved along the ridge road towards Fort Widley, where they turned into a field bordering Widley Walk, and came into action towards the West Down. The advance of White's main columns continued without interruption as far as Mill Lane and beyond; but as yet not a shot had been interchanged. Where was the enemy? Shrewd observers began to suspect that Gen. White was in danger of being entrapped; and the conjecture was strengthened by the appearance of a straggling line of skirmishers down in the low-lying lands between Portsdown and Porchester. An ineffective dropping fire, too distant to have injured him much, was the only obstacle to Lord Ranelagh's occupation of Wymering, where he at once came into contact with Sir F. Festing from Hilsea. Festing, at the commencement of the fight, besides lining the Cosham Woods, had detached a battalion to the left to stretch a hand towards his friends. By half-past 1 the Fareham army had so far succeeded in its object, that one whole brigade, Moncrieff's, and half of another, Ranelagh's, had been thrown into Cosham, an outwork of Hilsea, while the remaining two brigades had held their own along the left flank, or the northern side of that position. The decision of the umpires was that Gen. Monck had gained an easy victory. As soon as the fight was over, the whole of the troops, after a few minutes' rest, went direct to their positions in readiness for the march-past. This was fixed to take place at a spot on the northern side of the hill, half-way between Forts Widley and Southwick. The troops were formed up for the march-past with unusual rapidity, and without any confusion or fuss, and the marching was good. After the march-past, the Volunteers who remained for the night in Portsmouth were marched back there and dismissed, while all the others went to either Havant, Porchester, or Fareham, whence they were got off with the greatest rapidity in about a couple of hours.

THE SHAM-FIGHT AT DOVER.

The field-day at Dover is described as having been, thanks to Gen. Newdigate, one of the best-designed and most perfectly carried-out field-days that has ever taken place. The general idea supposed the landing of a hostile army between Folkestone and Hythe, bent on the capture of London, and to facilitate that design detaching a division to capture Dover Castle, if possible, or, at any rate, to mask that position while the main object was being accomplished. The rôle of invader was undertaken by the column which Col. Davies, of the Grenadier Guards, marched down from London on Good Friday. His force included six 40-pounder guns and eight 20-pounder guns. The defending force, under Col. W. H. Goodenough, included a number of Volunteer artillery, who manned the guns of Fort Burgoyne, and of an unfinished but armed redoubt on the Deal road. The invaders took up a position parallel to the Sandwich road, facing the south-east, their right resting on Kearnsey Hill plantation, their left on Archer's Court Wood. They were in a depression of the ground that hid them completely from the defenders. The defenders were not content to cower under the shelter of the guns in Fort Burgoyne and the redoubt, but pushed forward and occupied Frith Farm and the line of the tunnel, while another portion of the force occupied the village of Guston. The defenders made a good fight; but Hozier's 20-pounders were supposed to be doing severe execution, and being thus shaken by artillery fire, the nerves of the garrison were not equal to sustaining the shock of direct attack from a superior force of their own arm as well, and under force of a charge they retreated. Directly the village was captured, Hozier turned his guns on the Frith Farm position; and having advanced pari passu with the bulk of the invading force, he was now in a position to enfilade the defenders' line. The defenders fell back defending every defensible position, and, leaving a strong garrison in the redoubt, were fain at last to retreat behind the line connecting this work with Fort Burgoyne. The heavy fire which these works commenced on the invaders at once put a stop to their advance. They wavered, became stationary, and at last sought such shelter as the ground afforded. Every available gun of the defenders was brought to bear in aid of the fort and redoubt, keeping the enemy stationary, and preventing him seeing that the defenders, on falling back behind the lost ridge that they had defended, were actively engaged in preparation for a final effort to retrieve the fortunes of the day. The shattered battalions reformed, field-guns from the garrison were got out, and when all was prepared the force moved resolutely up the slope which had given them shelter; and on gaining the crest commenced a furious attack on the enemy. The whole of the artillery on the side of the defence thundered without intermission, the rattle of musketry was incessant, and when it was judged that the invaders had become completely demoralised, a bayonet charge drove them back defeated to the Frith Farm position, the "cease fire" which was then sounded bringing the action to an end. The counter-attack was delivered in full view of many thousands of spectators, whose satisfaction was enhanced by the forming-up of the whole force, directly after the action had ceased, for a march-past.

Major-Gen. Newdigate has issued the following General Order, dated Dover, April 14, 1884:—"The Major-General Commanding cannot allow the Volunteer troops who have taken part in the field-day to-day to leave his command without thanking them for the excellent and intelligent manner in which the manœuvres have, on the whole, been carried out. He will not, in this short order, attempt to criticise the different movements, but hopes, after receiving the reports of the respective commanders and of the umpires, to offer a few remarks on the subject. The Major-General congratulates Col. Davies upon the successful march of the column under his command from Faversham to Dover. He was present when it arrived, and was struck by the soldierlike appearance and good marching of the men after a long day's work. He considers that the lessons learnt by those who take part in the marching columns are perhaps the most important of any that are to be derived from the Easter military exercises. The military spirit that pervades the force, and the soldierlike conduct of the men who have been quartered in Dover, Shorncliffe, and Canterbury, reflect the greatest credit on all ranks."

The special correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says:—"The best witness who could possibly be called to prove, by indisputable evidence, the admirable discipline and consistent good-conduct of the thousands of Volunteers who slept and were quartered at Dover on Easter Sunday night, would be a chance traveller who journeyed down to the garrison town by the late mail train from London. Remember it was Eastertime, and the close of an off-day. The Volunteers had been hard at work on the march-down between Canterbury and Dover; they had not allowed the grass to grow under their feet, and Easter day was virtually the only time they were likely to get to themselves. They spent it soberly and respectfully, and carried out to the very letter the instructions of the Adjutant-General, and the earnest wishes of those who immediately commanded them."

The Daily News says:—"Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, following the precedent set by himself two years ago, has decided not to issue any special order concerning the Easter Monday Review and the behaviour of the Volunteers, who for three days were quartered in the neighbourhood of Portsmouth under his command. It is, however, no secret that he is in every way satisfied with their soldierly conduct during that time, and officers of his Staff speak in terms of unstinted praise of the discipline, ready obedience to orders, and strict regard for military regulations that have been observed by every man, whether in barracks, or about the streets, or on the field, off duty or under arms. They have been put to the test of being brigaded with Regular troops, and if there has been any marked difference between their bearing and that of Line regiments, it certainly has not been to the discredit of the Volunteers. The most difficult points for a commanding officer to impress upon his men used to be the importance of preserving absolute silence and steadiness in the ranks when standing or marching at attention. Now the necessity for rebuking any but the rawest of recruits on this score never seems to arise. Except when the command is given to march at ease, they are as silent as the sternest martinet could desire. The vast improvement brought about during the last three or four years in details of this kind now makes the work of Staff officers on a big review day comparatively easy. Otherwise, it would be impossible to conduct operations on an extensive scale with the precision and punctuality that have marked the present campaign generally."

The special correspondent of the Times states that "Lieut. Lloyd, Grenadier Guards, commanding the signalling party, speaks in terms of warm commendation of the Volunteer signallers of his party. He says that the improvement on last year's performances was most marked. During the preliminary campaign and yesterday's fight, some two or three hundred messages were sent, yet there was hardly a mistake. All did well; but among the best were the signallers from the Artists, the Inns of Court, the London Irish, the Civil Service, and the 1st Tower Hamlets Rifles. Indeed, Lieut. Lloyd considers these detachments quite equal to trained signallers of the Regular Army." Speaking of discipline, the same correspondent observes:—"Though the town has been crowded, and the temptations to drink not wisely but too much have been numerous, the good order observed has been most creditable. I have only seen since I arrived here on Saturday afternoon one drunken Volunteer and one drunken Regular. An officer of the Adjutant-General's Department confirms me in my opinion of the good behaviour of all, whether Regulars or Volunteers. He tells me that they have behaved admirably, and that not a single complaint has been made by the police. The latter, by the way, have done their work well, and yesterday performed the difficult task of regulating the streams of carriages to and from Portsdown Hill with temper and judgment."

"A General Officer" writes with respect to the Dover manœuvres:—"The tactical field-day at Dover, devised by Gen. Newdigate, and carried out under his personal superintendence with much painstaking care by every one, had for its main object the avoiding of 'unrealities' as much as possible, and would have been pre-eminently successful in this respect, compared with all bygone Easter Mondays, but for the horrible reality in the shape of King Mob, that, thrusting itself perpetually with cool indifference between contending forces, and occupying the tops of banks and walls, and every conceivable vantage-point for a view, cast not only an air of farce over the combat, but destroyed much of the advantage that both sides would otherwise have gained in the practice of tactical handling of troops under fire. There was actually a sprinkling of petticoats at one time in the sandbag parapet of the advanced redoubt, and with masses of holiday loafers, with sweethearts and wives, asserting their rights as Britons to go everywhere and see everything, a Clery could not make things clear as regards 'minor tactics.' Under such circumstances, the average General of one's youth, of the Flanders Army type, would have talked tall and lost his temper. But 'the model of a modern major-general' commanding the South-Eastern District did neither, but pleasantly made the very best of everything, and with persistent patience waited until the programme he had laid down was carried out effectively in all its stages. This was done comparatively quietly, without any reckless riding or rushing on the part of the Staff, and the men appeared much more in hand and attentive to the small details of drill than formerly, though they still showed that Volunteer dislike to prompt obedience to the 'Cease fire' as long as cartridges are left, and one could hardly be down on one green battalion who, never having had a chance of 'losing off' their fair quota all day, delivered a little feu de joie at the finish. Lord E.

Clinton's command owed something to fine feathers and their tailors, but the way they marched past and their officers saluted showed a marked superiority in drill over the others. As a rule, with most battalions the distances were very badly kept between companies, and the saluting of the officers was in many cases atrociously awkward. One à cheval went by stern foremost; another all but upset his little self by sticking the point of his sword into the ground. Now, not one of those who went through all sorts of contortions with arms, legs, and swords, but could have done the thing with a certain grace had he only taken a little previous trouble practising, either by himself or before his friends, with his walking-cane! The swing and pace of some corps was very superior to others, but the music, which likewise varied in quality, may have been the cause. Almost every trooper of Lord Ormonde's 100 Mounted Rifle- men looked as smart and soldierlike as their chief, and the splendid teams of waggon-horses of the Cinque Ports Artillery well deserved the plaudits of the crowd. But except to please the Volunteers and their friends, these big field-days will almost always be useless until some effectual means can be devised by the authorities to keep the ground free from the interference of the spectators."

THE ARMY IN EGYPT.

The troops in Cairo are distributed as follows:—The 6th Baty. 1st Brig. Scottish Division, R.A., in the Citadel, the detachment of 1st Batn. South Staffordshire Regt. in the Citadel, the 1st Batn. Royal Highlanders (Black Watch) and the 2nd Batn. of the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, who give up their quarters at the Citadel to the 1st Batn. of the Gordon Highlanders, in the Kasr-el-Nil Barracks.

A detachment of the 1st Batn. of the South Staffordshire Regt., made up to 100 men, were under orders to proceed to Port Said, but were countermanded, as the Marines were in possession.

Surg.-Major J. Morgan has proceeded from Cairo to Suez in medical charge of the invalids from the capital for England.

Surg. J. Prendergast, A.M.D., Surg. Cross, of the Royal Navy, Lieut. H. Littledale, of the York and Lancaster Regt., and Lieut. Gordon, Highlanders, have been invalided for England by the Jumna. Surg.-Major W. McNamara arrived in Cairo on April 3 from Suez, in charge of the 62 invalids disembarked from the Jumna. Surg.-Major W. S. Hedley has been appointed Sanitary Officer for the Cairo District. Surg. G. M. H. Colman has been posted for duty to the Cairo Citadel. Brigade-Surg. N. Norris has been posted to Abbassiyeh for duty.

Lieut.-Col. Parr has mentioned Col. Mahmoud Bey Asif and Acting Lieut.-Col. Ahmed Kamal Bey in flattering terms for their recent services in the Soudan.

Lieut.-Col. Doran, of the 1st Batn. West Kent Regt., has been granted leave of absence from the 7th inst. to June 15 next, pending his retirement on full pay at his own request.

El-Ahram considers the recent operations of the British Expeditionary Force in the Eastern Soudan to have yielded no result, excepting that several thousands of God's servants have perished uselessly.

Lieut. Romilly has returned from Suakim, and resumed his duties as Aide-de-Camp to Lieut.-Gen. Stephenson.

Officers and men commenced to wear summer clothing on the 15th inst., after which date helmets will be worn on all occasions.

Major Kitchener and Capt. Rundle, who left Cairo on a mission to Berber, were stopped, by order, at Assouan.

Leave of absence has been granted to Major N. G. Chalmers, of the Cameron Highlanders, to proceed to England on urgent private affairs. Capt. Orange, King's Royal Rifle Corps, has relieved Lieut. Verschoyle of the duties connected with the District Pay Office.

Capt. Wilson, R.N., who distinguished himself in such a conspicuous manner at the battle of Teb, has been recommended by Gen. Graham for the Victoria Cross.

Lieut.-Col. Vandeleur has been to Keneh, Esneh, and Edfoo, to report on the state of the country.

Dean Butcher has been appointed at Cairo to act as Chaplain to the Forces from the 30th ult.

Capt. F. M. Robinson, of G Baty. B Brig. R.H.A., rejoined from leave of absence on the 21st ult.

Discharges of non-commissioned officers and men from the Army of Occupation are suspended till further orders.

The correspondent of the Hampshire Telegraph hears from Suakim that our Blue-jackets fairly cursed both the Gatlings and the Gardners they were detailed to drag to the front. The weight of these guns was found to add greatly to the labours of the men. Then the Gatlings jambed when fire was opened with them, and first one and then another lock had to be taken out, so that they were found of comparatively little use. The feed of the Gardner guns was also found much against them, the sand getting in amongst the loose and exposed cartridges, and being carried into the mechanism, repeatedly stopped the firing, and just at the critical moment, when the 65th Foot were giving way, the guns were all useless. No wonder we lost so many naval officers at these guns. Just when a few well-directed volleys from a machine-gun would have swept the whole ground clear, the barrel-organ single-shot guns were hors-de-combat. So much for the authorities selecting weapons against the dictates of common-sense. Even now, after having laid down hard-and-fast rules regarding the competition of shell-firing machine-guns, the authorities are going to purchase large numbers of a gun which did not come up to their own conditions, stipulating that it shall be made to fire the ammunition supplied by the inventor whose gun was within their limits as to weight, and exceeded their stipulations as to range, penetration, and rapidity of fire. "I ask again, why saddle the service with two guns, and force the men to learn two drills, to do the same work?" A question, we should say, to be answered by those responsible for the outlay they are incurring, an outlay devoid of all common-sense.

ON THE TACTICS OF NAVAL BATTLES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I have been unable at an earlier date to notice the very favourable comments contained in your Gazette of the 1st and 22nd ult., on my lecture, delivered at the Royal United Service Institution, on "Ramming," as the prominent feature of future Naval victories. I now desire, with your permission, to offer some remarks on the opinions you have expressed on certain points of my lecture, where further explanation appears to be required, in order to establish a clear understanding of my views on Naval tactics. It is difficult in the limited space allowed for a lecture on a subject embracing so many considerations, to cover all the ground of probable criticism, but in my endeavour to enunciate certain broad principles on the tactics of Naval warfare which should dominate construction, I have been pleased to find such an amount of general agreement with the views I entertain, and the importance of having these matters fully considered by the service at large cannot be over-estimated. I desire, in the first place, to correct an error in your Gazette of the 22nd ult., where quoting from my lecture. I am supposed to have recommended light draught as an essential qualification for fleet ships. On referring to my tables, specifying in numerical order the qualifications of fleet ships of class A and B, you will find that light draught is the last requirement in the order of merit of the qualifications named, by which it is implied that these ships may have the greatest draught of water consistent with what our harbours and docks will admit of. No doubt that light draught has had its recommendations in enabling ships to navigate shoal waters and attack an enemy's harbour defences, and as the days are gone by when this mode of warfare could be ventured upon, and the climax of Naval supremacy and England's safety will depend on the results of ocean warfare, and deep draught of water is essential to obtaining short ships and depth of hold, which are elements of handiness and safety to the vitals, both important features of fighting efficiency in fleet actions. I will now refer to your remarks on battles between single ships. The principle object of my lecture was to show that as the tactics which could be resorted to in single actions with plenty of sea-room for manœuvring would not be available in fleet actions, where ships would fight in masses; and that as tactics should rule construction, it is essential that there should be two classes of fleet ships, giving prominence to those special qualifications in each class which would afford them the greatest fighting power consistent with the exigencies of battle. For this purpose, I maintained that whilst handiness would prove the most powerful element of efficiency in fleet actions, speed would prove most telling in single actions, and for the reason that, whilst ramming would be the prominent feature of fighting in the one case, and unavoidable, the gun attack would be most resorted to in the other, and the ram blow seldom accomplished, because avoidable. I argued that as an increase of speed beyond what was actually essential for fleet actions could only be obtained by increased size of ship and greater length of hull, and as both these features were antagonistic to handiness, that the amount of speed should be limited in the one class, in order to secure an increase of handiness; and that as regards the other class intended for foreign service as single cruisers, and not to fight in line-of-battle, handiness should be sacrificed for speed. It is very easy to contemplate on paper a superiority of speed and handiness combined, as Col. Sir C. H. Nugent has done, in his most valuable lecture on the "Imperial Defence;" but, unfortunately, this happy combination cannot be realised. As regards both classes of fleet ship, A and B, referred to in my lecture, I advocated the strongly fortified bow as a crowning element of victory, admitting, in order to obtain this, an equivalent reduction of weight of broadside protection. I endeavoured in my lecture to show that the speed being equal, the strongest-bowed ships would, both in fleet actions and in single contests, have an overpowering advantage, as they would enforce their own mode of fighting,—that is to say, that in fleet actions they would compel the bow-to-bow encounter; and in single actions they would force an adversary to meet bow-to-bow, or to turn away and fight stern on, and therefore at great disadvantage. I observe that in your leading article of March 22 you argue against the opinion I expressed, that in a running fight the ship fighting stern-on would necessarily be placed at a great disadvantage; and that you place reliance on the efficiency of stern torpedo defence, and Capt. Colomb also takes the same view of the case; but I argue that the pursuing ship would not attempt to ram under such circumstances, even if possessing superiority of speed, but would rely on the gun attack and her fortified bow, and would keep at a respectful distance from the Harvey torpedo; and if hit by the motive torpedo, whose accuracy of direction is uncertain, the effect of an explosion on a fortified bow, such as I proposed, with the lower compartment filled with cork, would not be very serious. And I question whether a torpedo would not be deflected by the wave from the bow of a ship advancing at good speed. On the other hand, however, it cannot be denied as regards gun attack and defence, the stern must be more vulnerable than the bow. On another point you differ from me in opinion, namely, when I say that handiness in ships designed for single actions is not of so great importance as in ships intended mainly for fleet actions, where the space for manœuvering would necessarily be confined. Here, again, it is a matter of give-and-take, or speed versus steadiness, as it is essential that the fleet ship intended for foreign service, and therefore for single cruising, should have great speed as an element of self-preservation, and for purposes of capture; and handiness must therefore be somewhat sacrificed. But apart from these considerations, and as regards fighting qualities in single action, the question arises whether, with plenty of sea room for manœuvring, the fastest ship, or the slower and handier vessel, will have the advantage, other fighting qualities being equal. Superior speed enables a ship to bring on an action, or to assist an action, or to haul off to repair damages, and to choose her position and select her own tactics, and moreover, to avoid the ram encounter by keeping her distance. The slower but handier ship must fight, cannot escape if disabled, and cannot choose her own distance. I am willing to leave this question of dispute to the following test of superiority, namely,—Which of these two ships would captains select to fight a single action with? The importance of two classes of fleet ships is so manifest, that it is to be hoped that it will not be lost sight of in future design and construction; and as it appears that our Navy is likely to be dangerously handicapped in our future wars in point of numerical strength, it is the more essential that nothing should be neglected to secure the greatest amount of fighting efficiency for that arm of national defence on which the safety of our empire will have mainly to rely.—I am, &c.,

GEORGE ELLIOT, Admiral.

Fair Italy. By W. Cope Devereux, R.N., F.R.G.S. (Kegan Paul, Trench, and Co.)

A ramble through "fair Italy" possesses a magic charm to which but few hearts ever fail to respond. At all seasons it is a bewitching theme, but mostly so at the present, when spring heralds in the new summer, and lengthening days give promise for the future. The author draws attention to the fact that within the last few years a new Italy has sprung into existence; the dream of Cavour has been realised, and, contrary to all predictions, she has evinced a union and cohesiveness so complete as to surprise all, and possibly disappoint some who were jealous of her. The author of this volume becomes eloquent when touching on the theme of the Riviera and Monte Carlo, and admits that his chief reason for writing was to afford himself an opportunity of exposing the deadly evils of the plague-spot of the paradise called Monte Carlo. Continuing the subject, the author has prepared a table of statistics, which discloses the most appalling feature connected with the gaming-tables, the number of Monte Carlo suicides. It may serve to qualify the strong bias which exists at Monte Carlo to know that, according to the statement of one of the most important London journals, no fewer than 19 suicides have been declared since January 1, 1884. At Monico the rage is much more prononcé. The author of the tale of travel proves himself to be a cheerful companion and a well-informed critic; he is thus enabled to enjoy himself, and at the same time find many opportunities of correcting wrongful impressions, and that without hurting the amour propre of any one.

The Violinist of the Quartier Latin. By G. Curzon. (Sampson Low and Co.)

The writer of this novel has left it to the ingenuity of the reader to decide whether it is the work of a lady or not, and also whether he or she has adopted a nom de plume. Although these are not matters of much importance, they may be sufficiently so to give birth to kindly speculation and to arouse curiosity. There are some incidents in this tale which will be patent before the perusal of the first volume has been completed. The reader will then have become aware that "The Violinist" is no ordinary work of fiction, but one which evidences the possession of far greater intellectual ability than is to be found in works of a similar character. It is a bold thing for any aspirant to literary fame, especially if she be an authoress, to come boldly before the public supported solely by the conviction that if she fail, she has mistaken her métier and overrated her power. In this instance, however, the word failure may at once be disregarded. The story is one of rare excellence, the plot constructed with consummate skill, the characters handled with marked decision, and above all, the interest sustained with unerring accuracy, even to the close of the last page. What will, also, at once strike the reader is the extreme beauty of the traits of character with which the writer has invested the heroine, and the deep pathos which marks the relation of the profoundly dramatic situations that herald in the dénouement. This brief description of The Violinist of the Quartier Latin may serve to draw attention to its faults and to its merits. We hope very shortly to refer again to it, and to enter into a closer examination of the writer's claim to assume the rôle of a novelist.

The Royal Kalendar and Index, just published by Allen and Son, is a work of great practical utility, and appears to have been compiled with considerable care.

Messrs. Cassell and Co., Limited, have issued the first part of a new periodical, entitled Great Industries, which doubtless will attract many readers. It will supply ample information as to some, if not all, of the great industries of Great Britain, and justify the claim of Britain to be an industrial State. The present number is profusely illustrated by explanatory engravings. The same company has issued the first part of a pamphlet, to be completed in ten parts, entitled "The Early Days of Christianity," by F. W. Farrar. This little work should command universal attention.

While the Channel Squadron was in Phalerum Bay, a fatal accident occurred on board the Minotaur, flagship of the Duke of Edinburgh. At the close of the quarterly practice with revolvers, and after orders had been given to unload, a young seaman asked the gunner's mate to explain the mechanism of a pistol. The latter took up a revolver in which there happened to be a cartridge that had missed fire. It exploded, shooting the seaman through the jaw, the bullet lodging in the spinal column. The unfortunate man died in a few minutes.

MACHINE-GUNS FOR INDIAN SERVICE.

A 10-barrel machine-gun for Martini-Henry cartridges was tried at Poona on the 14th ult., in presence of Lieut.-Gen. the Hon. A. E. Hardinge, C.B., and the principal Staff officers of the Bombay Army. Briefly summarised the details of these experiments are as follows:—The trial was carried out against No. 2 Mountain Battery of four 7-pr. mountain guns firing shrapnel, and 150 rank and file, 2nd Batn. 4th Regt. The range was 1,200 yards, each of the competitors had its own target, 18 ft. long by 6 ft. high, with 6-ft. screens behind on rising ground, so arranged that no bullet could go through more than one target. No. 2 Battery of mountain guns commenced, and the four guns fired 49 shrapnel in four minutes (or an average of three shots per minute for each gun). There were 182 hits, equal to 45 hits per minute, or one hit for every 11 shrapnel bullets fired, each shrapnel containing 42 bullets. The Nordenfelt gun came next, served by six men, and fired 1,596 rounds of rifle cartridge in about three minutes, scoring 284 hits, equal to 95 hits per minute, or one hit for every five-and-a-half shots fired. The 150 men of the King's Own Royal Lancaster fired 3,935 rounds (or 26 rounds per man), making 507 hits, equal to 169 hits per minute or 1 hit for every 8 shots fired. It was noticed that the 150 men fired especially steady, and their score against an 18-ft. wide target was certainly much above the average of a company at a range of 1,200 yards, still the waste of ammunition per shot scored was 50 per cent. greater with the rifles than with the machine-gun, and the waste of lead bullets with the shrapnel was 100 per cent. greater than with the machine-gun, besides the waste of shrapnel shells and fuzes, although the shell guns had the advantage that their fuzes were set previous to counting the time of the firing. As the four mountain guns scored 45 hits per minute, eight such guns would have been required to give the 95 hits per minute scored by the machine-gun; whereas, on the other hand, 86 rank and file would give the same 95 hits per minute if infantry can be always relied upon to make such good practice at 1,200 yards as was made on this occasion. The machine-gun was served by six men, whereas eight mountain-guns would require over 100 men, besides muleteers, as against the 86 rank and file with rifles, equal to nearly 100 men, including officers and non-commissioned officers. This would seem to be an important consideration in countries where we have but few men available, and where their rations, equipment, tents, and ammunition are difficult to transport quickly and conveniently. The Nordenfelt presents a front 5 ft. wide, eight mountain guns would give 381 ft. frontage, and 88 men lying down in line with 2 ft. between each file, as on this occasion, would present a front-line of 440 ft. The artillery and infantry were, of course, thoroughly trained to their own arms, whereas, only one man of the machine-gun detachment was thoroughly conversant with the weapon, the other five had only had short preliminary instruction and practice. The machine-gun, as well as the guns and rifle, went through the trial without any hitch or jam; and those present seemed to be very pleased when it was afterwards proved that this machine-gun could fire the service Boxer cartridge almost as conveniently as the solid-case cartridge, because whatever form of cartridge with solid case that may hereafter be adopted by the Enfield Small Arms Committee, it is self-evident that the Army, and especially the Indian service, must for some years still be satisfied with the Boxer cartridges.

London Amusements.

The Carl Rosa opera season at Drury Lane commenced on Monday evening most auspiciously with Balfe's opera of "The Bohemian Girl," the old familiar melodies being charmingly given by Madame Georgina Burns as Arline, and Mr. Joseph Maas, who was in excellent voice, as Thaddeus. "Carmen," with Madame Marie Roze as the heroine, followed on Tuesday; and "Maritana," on Wednesday, enabled Mr. Maas to repeat his vocal triumphs as Don Cæsar. The chorus and orchestra have been organised with great care and completeness, and the audiences have been numerous and encouraging. Next Thursday will be produced the new opera, by Mr. C. Villiers Stanford, entitled "The Canterbury Pilgrims."

Her Majesty's Theatre had not a vacant seat when Mr. J. R. Taylor, on the night of Easter Monday, signalised the commencement of his season of romantic drama by a careful revival of the popular play of "The Ticket-of-Leave Man," which was excellently cast and most enthusiastically received.

At the Lyceum, Mr. Lawrence Barrett, the American actor, has firmly established himself in the good opinion of a London audience. It may be doubted, however, whether he is seen to the best advantage in such a drama as "Yorick's Love," adapted by Mr. W. D. Howells from the Spanish. When it is recorded that a comedian kills his wife's lover on the stage where a mimic representation of a husband's jealousy is being enacted, the plot of the piece is told. The action is supposed to take place at the Globe Theatre in 1613, but no attempt is made to realise the picturesque associations of the period.

The Olympic has produced Mr. Bartley Campbell's American drama, called "My Partner," presented as a study of life in the mining districts of Northern California. The piece has the recommendation of bringing once more before the London playgoer that excellent actor, Mr. George Rignold, whose manly pathos is prominently displayed in the very impressive situation closing the second act.

The Royalty has achieved a success with Hervé's merry and melodious comic opera, in three acts, called "La Cosaque," produced at the Variétés, Paris, so recently as last February. Miss Kate Santley is admirably adapted to Judic's part of the young Russian Princess, who commits all kinds of daring and diverting extravagances, and ends by marrying at last a good-hearted commercial traveller, representing a fashionable millinery establishment in Paris. Other personages are very capably portrayed by Miss Harcourt, Miss Amalia, Mr. Ashley, and M. Marius.

The Alhambra has turned Millöcker's German comic opera of "The Beggar Student" into a brilliant operatic spectacle, exactly suited to the requirements of its patrons, who find the partially reconstructed building much more conducive to their comfort, while the prices of admission have been advantageously rearranged. Miss Fannie Leslie gives a lively impersonation of the hero, who is merely a Claude Melnotte in Polish disguise; and other competent vocalists are found in Miss Marion Hood, Mdlles. Stavart and Verona, and Mr. Hallam and Mr. Mervin. The ballet of the Fair-folk and the elaborate military dance at the close of the opera exhibit the skill of the ballet-master and the grace and activity of Mdlle. Palladino and Mdlle. Pertoldi.

The Criterion Theatre, almost rebuilt and considerably improved, was reopened after a long recess on Wednesday evening, when Mr. Charles Wyndham and his company, reappearing in the farcical comedy of "Brighton," had a cordial welcome on their return from a highly successful tour through the United States.

On Thursday night the magnificent new theatre on the northern side of Leicester Square, The Empire, commenced its first season, under the management of Mr. Alexander Henderson, with a new version of Hervé's opera-bouffe of "Chilpéric," prepared by Messrs. Henry Hersee and H. B. Farnie. Seldom, if ever, has a production of the kind been so brilliantly mounted, so picturesquely illustrated, or furnished with such a number of gorgeously dressed and comely supernumeraries. The performance is one that pleases the eye and charms the ear. The internal arrangements of the theatre and the seating accommodation are of a comfortable and cosy kind. Centrally situated as it is, and close to the service clubs, the Empire Theatre will no doubt receive the patronage its directors have shown, by their energy and enterprise in their first production, they thoroughly deserve.

On Thursday evening a two-act comic opera, called "Dick," was announced to be brought out at the Globe, and a four-act adapted play, called "The Ironmaster," was presented for the first time at the St. James's Theatre.

At the Novelty, "Nita's First" still draws crowded houses, and deserves them, for all round there has not been a merrier, more laughable, and pleasant farce in three acts seen on the stage for many a day, and it is admirably acted, the genre bits of housemaid by Miss Lesley being quite remarkable. Miss S. Vaughan's Miss Prim is a capital study and make-up, and Mr. Robertson is in his element as Whobbledehoy. Mr. J. Fizzleton and his wife are perfect; and if we could only believe "Nita" ever had a first and such a bouncing baby as we see, the play, in spite of its plot, would be as real, and far more amusing than life. The adaptation of "The Country Girl," charmingly put on the stage, gave Miss K. Vaughan an opportunity for displaying ability of no ordinary character as a genteel comedy actress.

The Vokes Family have taken possession of the Imperial Theatre, Westminster, where they give their afternoon performances of an amusing vocal and pantomimical extravaganza, entitled "In Camp," played by them in America and in the provinces with notable success.

The Holborn Theatre—formerly known as the Holborn Amphitheatre—has been opened with a clever company of real negro minstrels and dancers; and two exciting melodramas have been produced at the Surrey and the Standard theatres, under the respective titles of "The King of Diamonds" and "A Bitter Wrong."

The Grand Theatre, Islington, has an Irish drama, of purely domestic interest, called "The Donagh," illustrated by a charming panorama of Killarney, painted by Mr. William Beverly.

At the Elephant and Castle Theatre, has been produced a military drama, entitled "The Knapsack."

In literary and theatrical circles, the double loss sustained by the deaths of Mr. Charles Reade and of Mr. Henry James Byron, has been deeply felt. Mr. Charles Reade, who expired in his 70th year, was followed to his grave in Willesden Churchyard on Tuesday afternoon by a number of private and professional friends, who witnessed on Thursday, at Brompton Cemetery, the interment also of H. J. Byron, the popular dramatist, who, at the time of his decease, was scarcely 50.

The Legislative Council of St. Lucia has passed the following resolution:—"That this Council being of opinion that the improvement of Castries Harbour is absolutely necessary, do recommend the Secretary of State for the Colonies to sanction the raising of a loan for that purpose by the issue of debentures from time to time, as occasion may require, for a sum not exceeding in the aggregate £40,000; and resolved, that the first issue shall not exceed £15,000, that the work shall be executed by contract, and that all expenditure be limited to the thorough dredging of the harbour, and the necessary repairs to existing wharves; further resolved that, looking to the facilities which such improvements would afford to ships of her Majesty's Navy, the Secretary of State be asked to move her Majesty's Government to give its guarantee in the usual form to that loan, and to make Castries the chief naval coaling station in the West Indies."

HOW many of the writers and readers, politicians, &c., who have so glibly ordered Egypt to give up the Soudan know that Egypt conquered the Soudan before England had ceased to be a slave State —that is, before the Emancipation Act was carried out in British possessions? How many of them could tell what have been the conquests and annexations of Great Britain since Mehemet Ali founded Khartoum, in 1823? Would we not die to the last man, and all that sort of thing, ere we yielded up, at the bidding of our most friendly of friends, the territories acquired, since 1823, in India, New Zealand, China, &c.? Mehemet Ali admitted the suzerainty of the Sultan, and as Captain Hennebert, in the excellent little book which Mr. Pauncefote has just translated under the title of "The English in Egypt," &c.,* tells us, Turkish troops garrisoned Suakim, Massowah, &c., till 1868. It was in that year the Sultan made over the charge of the western shore of the Red Sea, from Suez to Babelmandeb, to the Khedive of Egypt, Ismail Pasha, with one result of undeniable advantage to the world—that the coast, from having been the terror of navigators, became one of the best lighted in the world. From 1869 to 1875 Ismail extended his conquests along the Somali coast as far as Cape Gardafui, and subdued the Bogos, Baze, Gallabat, Jefareh, and other savage independent tribes between Suakim-Berber and the Abyssinian provinces, establishing garrisons, and police, telegraphic, and postal services, and protecting missionary schools and stations. By the end of 1874 Sir S. Baker carried the Egyptian flag to the Equator, Darfour was annexed at the same time to the Great Pashalic at Cairo. Here is Hennebert's account of how it happened:—

"A man of some education had left Khartoum to seek fortune in the still unexplored steppes, forming to the south of Dar-Four the country called Dar-Fertit. There he managed to acquire a certain influence over the people, and to cut out for himself a kind of 'State,' the sovereignty of which he naturally claimed. That man, said to be of German origin, was named Ziber-Rahaman. Another adventurer, known by the name of Babalaoui-Mahommed, was at the same time endeavouring to persuade the Egyptian Government that he could easily subdue the whole region of the Soudan between the course of the Nile and the lagunes of Lake Tchad. The Khedive, convinced, supplied him with money, a few troops, and the adventurer started for the wars, his programme in hand. But it so happened that one day this Babalaoui had a quarrel with Ziber, who had become Sultan of Dar-Fertit, and he was killed in the fight. Upon this the Egyptian Government held Ziber responsible for the accident. They openly required him either to refund the amount of the drafts given in favour of the deceased, or to take his place in the prosecution of the enterprise. Upon reflection, the Sultan deemed it advisable to accept the second of the two conditions which they were so good as to leave to his choice. In his turn he undertook to achieve conquests. Having secured as allies the Arabs of Rizerat, in the south of Dar-Four, he attacked the Arabs of Bagara, and took from them Shegga, the principal entrepôt of their great slave trade. The Khedivial Government at once appointed him Mudir of Shegga. This took place towards the end of 1873. Early in 1874, Brahim, the Sultan of Dar-Four, justly alarmed at the progress and already threatening power of Ziber, marched out resolutely to meet him, and was so unfortunate as to be beaten. Then the Adventurer, who had taken up the enterprise of Babalaoui, pushed on freely to the heart of Dar-Four. In order to cover his capital, Brahim hastily concentrated his forces at Manaouashi, a spot at three days' march from El Fasher. It is there he fought his last battle, and was killed (October, 1874), as Babalaoui-Mahommed had been. It is from that place that the conqueror, selecting a good military position, proceeded to establish himself on the mountain, at Torra. The news of the success of the enterprise reached Cairo before January 1, 1875, and immediately a corps of regular troops, under the orders of Ismail Pasha Ayoub, left Kordofan to confirm the annexation of the new province. The Government of the Khedive established there a permanent garrison of 10,000 men. The system of conquest to the death, methodically carried on from the beginning of the century, ended by bringing up to 2,250,000 square kilomètres the total area of Egypt."

We do not know how far the rest of the account is accurate, but we can assert positively that Zebehr has not any right or desire to claim German origin. If we could only get ourselves to believe that Egyptians were human beings, or that they had the ordinary feelings of humanity, we would admit that the better informed and enlightened amongst them who had sympathy with the great designs of Ismail Pasha, and who could comprehend the ideas of empire and dominion, must feel something like resentment at the policy which calls upon Egypt to abandon the enormous empire of which the progress has thus been described. The book we have quoted, the work of a clever and quick-sighted man, who has served in Algiers, contains some very interesting chapters on Pan-Islamism and on the Slave Trade, both of which have their influence on the Soudan question. With regard to the first, we are told something new, which may be true, as to the enormous influence exercised by Arab journals, with correspondents in Morocco, Algeria, Tunis, Tripoli, Egypt, Arabia, Persia, Bengal, China, and Japan, over the Mussulman world. There is one paper which issues, we are told, 100,000 copies. These are sent all over the world—from Samarcand to Mogador, from Constantinople to Timbuctoo. In the chapter on the "trade in ebony," Captain Hennebert gives an exceedingly graphic sketch of the horrible operations by which the markets in Asia and in Turkey, Morocco, Brazil, the Spanish and Portuguese colonies, were supplied by the slave-dealers, at the head of whom was the Sultan of Darfour, who was struck down by Zebehr. As the author observes, it was, no doubt, on that very account Zebehr was despatched on the Sultan's track by the Khedive Ismail. We cannot, however, accept as perfectly well-established the positive statement that the Bagara Arabs were driven by Zebehr's seizure of their principal slave-market to plot for the expulsion of the English, and to found the National Party. Nor can we believe that they found funds for the enterprise, far less that they selected Arabi and the Mahdi simultaneously to work at the distance of 2,000 kilomètres for the common object. Captain Hennebert's account of the operations against Arabi is not very exact. For example, it is stated that the English decided to land troops in Egypt after long and fruitless negotiations, and that "as soon as these troops reached their destination" Admiral Seymour bombarded Alexandria! It would have been well indeed had such been the case, for Egypt would have been saved £5,000,000 sterling. But what would have happened to the Army without a Tel-el-Kebir is what no fellow can say. Then, again, Captain Hennebert attributes to the British Cabinet gifts of foresight the exact antithesis of what the British Cabinet showed it had. He says that Tewfik Pasha, yielding to the suggestions of the English Ministry, issued urgent orders to put Khartoum in a state of defence; that General Alison sent up officers to report upon the state of the place, and that (this is the most serious mistake of all) it was the English Government which organised the expedition commanded by General Hicks! The author makes a most extraordinary jumble. He declares that 7,500 Infantry, 500 Cavalry, and four batteries of Artillery, were placed under the command, nominally, of Prince Hassan, who was actually in banishment. For all that could be gathered from Captain Hennebert, the whole was a regularly constituted army under British officers, and the men were enlisted under the auspices of the English Government. Instead of which, as we all, alas! know, the English Government said it would have nothing at all to do with the expedition, any more than it would have to do with Soudan except to compel Egypt to retire from it with all its garrisons. There is an exceedingly interesting and graphic account, fanciful of course, of the final scene at Hashgate, where Hicks met his end. But the author may be trusted with greater confidence in his description of the country between Suakim and Berber, which certain leading organs were so very anxious to see traversed by an English Army in the month of March. Let us see what he says:—

"The desolate shores of the Red Sea are bordered by volcanic mountains, whose burning sinuosities do not allow a single drop of water to escape. Not a blade of grass is to be seen on this land, formerly thrown into commotion by subterranean fires, and scorched now by a tropical sun. It was on such soil that the first halts were made. Then at the foot of the western slope of the chain of mountains on the littoral stretches out, as far as the eye can reach, a sea of sand, a sheet of incandescent silica, a desert,—for in Africa each road has its desert. It is only at the cost of a painful march and unheard-of sufferings that the journey can be accomplished. The track to be followed winds through a succession of arid passes, bare plains, and table-lands strewn with stones. The burning heat of the climate has, all along the road, left as landmarks the carcases of camels which had fallen dead on the spot from fatigue and exhaustion. In the Sahara they are skeletons one meets with. Here the dryness is such that it prevents the remains from decomposing. Like a bit of parchment, the skin of the dead animals remains adhering to their bones. The climate of these places may be called pyrometric. Night there does not counteract the effects of the solar heat which has raged during the day; at 3 o'clock in the morning the stones are still burning from the heat absorbed by them during the previous day. Under this torrid action, wood becomes tinder, and leather is turned into sheets of zinc. Caravans have to traverse, on this road, immense barren tracks, the aspect of which reminds one of shores forsaken by the sea. On the edge of the quicksands, high downs, furrowed with gaps, attest the violence of the storms which rage there. From the midst of the dazzling white sands emerge thick masses of black granite, the contrast suggesting sepulchral ideas. There you witness always the odious phenomenon of mirage. As far as the eye can reach, the mountains appear turned upside down, resting on their peaks as if they were on their natural base. They assume fantastic shapes in the eyes of the traveller, who thinks he perceives in the distance castles, dungeons, turrets, &c. The greater portion of this desert is denuded of any trace of organic life. By way of exception, thin tufts of dwarf palms, caudices of puny mimosas. The fauna are represented only by scorpions, lizards, and a few herds of gazelles. The aspect of this inert nature oppresses the soul, and leaves a painful impress of sadness, a deep feeling of horror. This, indeed, is the empire of Typhon, the genius of Sterility, whom the Egyptians depicted in hideous shapes. And not any more than on the coast is there a thread of water on that accursed road; at intervals only a well, at the bottom of which a fetid mud stagnates, horrible mess in which legions of unclean animals swarm, myriads of creeping creatures. But suffering reaches its culminating point when, by misfortune, the simoom is let loose. Here are the impressions of an officer, recorded on the subject in his diary:—'A north-west wind is rising. The atmosphere is becoming thick under its breath; clouds of dust fly about, come into collision, and envelop us in their circumvolution. Darkened by these frenzied clouds, the sun shows only a blood-coloured face; the light has assumed the lugubrious tints which characterise moments of eclipse. The air is burning, the gusts of wind which reach us seem to emanate from a furnace. A burning thirst devours us, and nothing to drink …… the wind has dried our goat-skins. An extrordinary lassitude has seized us. Torpor ensues …… we drop …… and the fury of the storm increases. If this continues we shall be buried in the sand!' One can judge what misery a column of troops must undergo in crossing such a country."

* W. H. Allen and Co., Waterloo Place.

FOR years we have advocated a thorough mobilisation scheme for the Navy. That it must be of the greatest importance to this country to be able in a few hours to send forth her squadrons, manned, armed, and equipped, and ready to engage in a naval action, needs no proving. Unfortunately, the necessity of having to act so promptly has never yet been brought home to the minds of our naval rulers. The Spanish Armada found England unprepared, and took the good Queen Elizabeth by surprise. Nevertheless, what with war-ships, privateers, and merchantmen, a fleet was scraped together, whose ships, being smaller and handier than the unwieldy Spanish monsters, soon dispersed the so-called Invincible Armada. From this and other causes Englishmen have come to possess an overweening confidence in the ability of the country to build and fit out ships with sufficient celerity and in sufficient numbers to answer all purposes. Any reform costing money is deprecated. Even the building of barracks at our principal Naval Arsenals is spread over such a vast number of years, that it seems hardly reasonable to hope that our grandchildren will see them completed. As to exercising the seamen of the Fleet at our chief ports in mobilising the ships of the Steam Reserve, the idea has never been thought of in this country, while in Germany it is frequently resorted to, with the object of testing the capacity of the Navy to meet sudden emergencies. Thus, for example, on Tuesday last orders were issued, without warning, by the German Minister of Marine, General von Caprivi, for the mobilisation of the whole German Fleet lying in ordinary at Kiel. Special trains at once conveyed the seamen from all parts of the coast to the chief Naval Arsenal of the Empire, where stores were drawn, ships were manned and armed, and in a few hours a squadron of twenty war-ships was steaming out to the anchorage; thus proving that, within twenty-four hours of the order being given, the whole German naval force can be mobilised and held in readiness for the defence of the coast or other warlike purpose. No such organisation exists in this country. Here, when it is necessary to suddenly commission a ship, and despatch her abroad in haste, all is confusion, both on board and in the dockyard. Then may be seen powder-cases piled one on the top of the other around the decks, with "purser's dips" stuck on here and there to shed light around, while the gunner and his mates stow the magazines. Powder and naked lights! a state of things which illustrates but too faithfully the chaotic state of our Naval Administration. But as this happens when but one ship has to be fitted out on an emergency, what, we may ask, would take place were it necessary to equip and despatch twenty ships to sea at once? None of them would get away for days. Weeks would be lost through want of organisation and red-tape; and in the meantime the enemy would be at our door, cutting off our commerce and the food of our people. The picture is in no wise exaggerated. Surely, then, it is time for the Admiralty to draw up a mobilisation scheme for the Navy, and to test it periodically, so as to make certain that everything works smoothly and without hitch. That a scheme of this sort is absolutely necessary to a Naval Power such as England, can easily be proved. In the first place, every other Naval Power can boast of an organisation we do not possess, and can arm, equip, and man their respective fleets far more quickly than we can. This would place the country and the Navy at a great disadvantage were war suddenly to break out. That any Power intending to attack us would give us the slightest warning we need not expect. The shock, like that of an earthquake, will take us unawares. Hence we should be prepared for every eventuality. Within twelve hours of the order being given, it should be possible for Sheerness, Portsmouth, and Plymouth to send out every ship in the Steam Reserve manned and equipped, and ready to keep the sea for three months. At the same time, all ships requiring repair should forthwith be taken in hand by the dockyard authorities. But to carry out such a programme without a hitch would be impossible as matters now stand. The question, really, is whether the country is content to allow things to go on in the old groove, or whether, recognising the necessity of being able to mobilise our Naval forces with the greatest celerity possible on the outbreak of war, Parliament will insist on such reforms being introduced into the administration of the Navy as will enable the service, England's first line of defence, to keep pace with the times. Were it not for the opposition of the civilian element, the executive of the Navy would long since have been in possession of a thorough mobilisation scheme. The naval officer looks always to the efficiency of the service, while the civilian permanent official studies nothing else but the question of cost; and because money would have to be spent were a mobilisation scheme adopted, that much-needed measure is shelved, with the assurance that there is plenty of time to study the question between this and the day our next war is declared. But who can tell that such is the case? Might it not be otherwise? May we not even now be "heading straight for war?" Let us hope not; but even then, let us, all the same, be prepared, and ready at all points to meet a foe; but to do so with success, the Navy is in want of a well-considered mobilisation scheme.

THE history or record of the Gordon "avatar" at Khartoum, which now affords some very knotty questions for contemporaries to solve, will surely become a maddening puzzle for any scientific future historian like Niebuhr or Green who wants to get at the "innards" of things. There was no more idea in any one's head of asking Gordon to go to Khartoum than there was of requesting him to repair to Jericho, from the vicinity of which he had arrived in Europe, to take charge of the King of the Belgians' expedition to the Congo, till about the end of November, 1883. Up to that time the Soudan was outside the range of Mr. Gladstone's sympathies. "What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba?" If the Khedive would go to such places, he must bear the consequences; and if the Nile would flow down from Khartoum to Cairo, so much the worse for the Nile! So Hicks went forth to battle and was slain for the Khedive, and it was then discovered that he was an Englishman, and that not only was our prestige damaged by his defeat, but that there was ground for fearing the Mahdi would march north and invade Egypt Proper. These were new considerations. We published a project from Gordon's inspiration of the mode of dealing with the difficulty, which will be found in the Army and Navy Gazette of December 3 last year. He had then not the least notion of service in the Soudan. Sir S. Baker was understood to be anxious for work in his familiar field. It was all very well to talk of evacuating the Soudan, but the Egyptians there in garrison, of whom we were the protectors, were in the position of the gentleman who caught the Tartar. There was pause for a while. People were thinking what was best to be done. It occurred all of a sudden to the Press that Gordon, who was just about to start for the West Coast of Africa, having been Governor of the Soudan, and having proved his power of organisation and management in certain cases—though there were instances of failure, as in the Basuto business—would be the very man for the difficult business of squashing the Mahdi, and securing the safe retreat of the Egyptian garrisons and the people whom they protected in Sennaar, Kordofan, Darfour, and the Equatorial possessions or occupations of the Khedive of Egypt. So they all raised an exceeding great and bitter cry, and shouted out, "Gordon to the rescue!" And the Government, in sore travail and much under the influence of "cries" of all sorts, jumped at the idea or the suggestion. Lord Granville says that "the Government had had for some time in view the possibility of making use of General Gordon's great reputation and experience as regards affairs in Egypt, and at last General Gordon was consulted as to whether he had any advice to give us on the subject," but he does not give any specific date. Well, Gordon at once gave the answer, "Send me! I concur with you in your policy of evacuation, and in not employing military force; I am confident I shall be able to achieve great results in that manner." The Government were glad to jump at the offer. They did not inquire into the reason for Gordon's confidence, but they closed with him at once, and requested the King of the Belgians to lend them Gordon, at the same time demanding of Gordon that he should accept the undefinable duty and the indeterminate authority which they desired to confer upon him. Gordon had just scored off the popular bat, and had stopped a ball which the War-Office bowler had sent at him to turn him out of the Army, on the ground that he had put his leg before wicket by going into Belgium. He had probably no very clear idea of the difficulties he would have to encounter in carrying out the vague programme of the Ministry,—that he should evacuate the Soudan, and clear out all the garrisons and dependents safely. Any way, he accepted the proposal that he should go to Khartoum with such objects in view. But he made one proviso. He was not to be under the orders of the Egyptian Government, though he was about to provide for the safety of Egyptian troops and subjects. That being granted, the plain inference was that he was going out under the order of the British Government in some shape or other. He was not to be autocratic,—not even independent. He was under orders. It was no violent shock, however, when we heard that Gordon had been created Governor of the Soudan by the Khedive, and that he had been invested with special powers by the Viceroy of Egypt in that country. It was obvious Queen Victoria could have nothing to say to the Soudan. Not only that—her Majesty's Government had declared that Egypt should have nothing to say to it. Therefore, Gordon's sole mission was to rescue and retire, and the authority he held for the exercise of it, as far as the Soudan was concerned, was derived from the Khedive, who paid the Egyptian troops there, and who was their only acknowledged master. Although Gordon would have nothing to do with the Khedive's Government as far as orders went, he asked for and obtained from the Khedive orders of another kind to clear his way, and he also demanded £40,000 from the Khedive's treasury. To do what? To enable him to give up a much-valued dominion of the Khedive himself, and to cover the retreat of the soldiers who had been placed in it by the Khedive's Government! Then with one companion he went forth. In the full assurance that he would be able by his personal influence to break up the Mahdi's confederacy, and to march leisurely out of the Soudan with all the honours of peace, he left Cairo with Colonel Stewart for Khartoum. But at the very outset of his mission in Egypt, before he went to Cairo at all, he met with obstacles which should have caused him to consider whether he was quite justified in his previous view of the situation. He had intended to go from Port Said to Suez, thence to Suakim, and then to take the route by the desert to Berber on the Nile, and strike south to Khartoum. With this notion in his head he proceeded straight to Suez, where a steamer was awaiting his arrival to take him to Suakim. When he arrived at Suez the project of going from Suakim to Berber was shown to be hazardous, and he gave it up. So then, proceeding westwards from that point to Cairo to confer with the authorities, he resolved to set out by the Nile for Khartoum, viâ Korosko and Abou Hamed. He did not remain very long in the capital; indeed, it could not have been agreeable for him to meet the Khedive, whose dominions he was about to decrease, or the Pashas he so vigorously assailed. But even then he thought of Zebehr as an auxiliary, if not his right-hand man, in the work he had to do. Gordon travelled like a legionless Cæsar to Korosko, in company with a ridiculous pseudo-Sultan of Darfour, whom it is wonderful he consented to take at all. Then he made that rapid journey through the Desert by the caravan route to the Nile at Abou Hamed, the dangers of which were magnified by our operations on the Red Sea coast, as our apprehensions for his safety were sharpened by the news which came of the Mahdi's activity, and of the increasing excitement among the tribes. But he was not molested on his way, and he was received at Khartoum, where Colonel Coetlogon was in command of a considerable miscellaneous force, with much respect, and even with enthusiasm. It was not supposed to be possible, by those who remembered his former rule there, that the Governor of the Soudan was coming without troops, and that all the sinews of war were wanting to him. He tried all the arts of peace at once. He opened the gaols and burned the law records, and threw the legal "instruments" into the Nile. He issued proclamations and made promises, and threatened; but it was in vain he declared that the slaveowners could hold their slaves without let or hindrance all over the Soudan, and offered the crown of a Sovereign to the Mahdi. The representative of a discredited feeble Khedive, who was kept in his palace at El Masr by infidel bayonets, and who had avowed that he only sought to be allowed to draw off his troops in peace, had no prestige in the eyes of the Sheiks, who saw in him a suppliant to the Mahdi, who would speedily be master of the land; and the tribes began to move down on Khartoum itself—to overlap it, to close in on the Nile and to obtain control of the desert routes, at last threatening Berber itself. Gordon's presence in Khartoum, his energy, resources, and military ability, the command of the river by his steamers, and the devotion he knows how to inspire, placed Khartoum itself out of the reach of danger; but Gordon knew well he could not, he cannot, hold out against a strict blockade, and that the life of the post can be counted by weeks. He applied once more for Zebehr's help; he did not disdain the services of the man whom his own words had done so much to render so odious in England that the Government dare not sanction his employment, far less ratify Gordon's offer to him of the Viceroyalty of the Soudan. He announced that English troops were marching to his assistance at Khartoum, and he left no stone unturned to detach the Arabs from the Mahdi. But from the first it was evident the tide was turned against him, and at last, whilst he declares he can hold out against all comers till July, he becomes so disheartened by the attitude of the Government and by the interruption of his communications, that he turns to the hated Turk for assistance, and suggests that a private subscription should be raised to enlist Mahommedan mercenaries. What for is not so plain; but Gordon is not the man to make such a proposal without reasons for it, good or bad, and we cannot conjecture what they were from anything known to us. It is perfectly clear, however, that help must come from outside, and there is no question of what that help ought to be. It would be bitter, everlasting disgrace to allow a British General of whom England is proud to be rescued by Turk, Egyptian, or Abyssinian. There are great difficulties in the way of immediate action. We do not advocate the dispatch of an English army through the desert in which the army of Cambyses met its doom; but we maintain that it would be quite feasible to move a column of troops such as India could furnish or our own garrison provide, by the Nile, with convoys of supply-boats and arrangements for portages at the rapids,—miscalled cataracts,—and that in two months, notwithstanding great heat and suffering, Khartoum could be set free.

LITTLE more than three years ago, the Boers of the Transvaal were agitating for a repeal of the violent act by which the South African Republic was declared by Sir T. Shepstone, with Lord Carnarvon's consent, to have ceased to exist. Their remonstrances were disregarded. They were told that as long as the sun shone in heaven the flag of England should float over the Transvaal—and so forth. An autocratic Government was established, for the Legislative Assembly was disregarded. As the Argus wrote at the time:—"It would appear, from the reply of the honourable the Colonial Secretary to the honourable Member for Potchefstroom, that it is quite optional with the Government to treat the wishes of the House, passed in solemn session, with deference, or to disregard them entirely. We must confess to a feeling of astonishment—first, that the Government should venture to declare, without hesitation, that a resolution of the House had been set aside, without the permission of the House; and second, that honourable Members (albeit nominees) should not have had the courage to resent the indignity offered—not to the honourable Member for Potchefstroom only, but to the whole Council. That the constitutional questions involved in this matter are of serious importance must be evident to everyone; and we shall be much surprised if the matter be allowed to pass without notice from honourable Members, whose privileges have been invaded, and whose dignity, as the Legislative Council of this Province, has been ruthlessly trodden under foot by the Government." We now see the Boer representatives received with honours due to the representatives of crowned heads in Europe—conferring with the Ministers of the Crown as equals, making Conventions and Treaties, and actively engaged in promoting the railway which we so unaccountably and stupidly neglected in deference to the jealousies of Natal. The Lord Mayor of London, who has been the very consistent and very ineffective enemy of the Boers, to show his abortive dislike, is reduced to the poor expedient of asking questions about the graves of the British soldiers at Pretoria! He might have done much good as plain Alderman Fowler if he had taken to heart the admissions of one of the most earnest advocates of annexation which were made in December, 1880. "Three-and-a-half years of our rule has exasperated the Boers, and, to say the least, disappointed the legitimate expectations of nearly every honest and independent Englishman. We do not desire to see a revival of the time prior to the annexation, when a feeling of insecurity pervaded all classes; we do not desire a reversal of the annexation; but we claim to have the system of government changed to one more in sympathy with the views of the people, and more in consonance with the letter and spirit of the solemn engagements entered into at the time the country was taken over." The Argus was called the English organ, but it was only a "local" journal, and the Downing Street authorities knew better than Colonial newspaper editors what was the real state of the Transvaal. As for the Volksstem, a Boer organ, of course it was utterly contemptible. Here is what that ridiculous "people's voice" declared:—"The Government is loved by no one in the land. It is thoroughly distrusted by the large majority of the white population—Africans as well as Europeans—and intensely hated by nearly every one of the original settlers of the country. The native population in and around the Transvaal is, we understand, not trusted by the Government; and a large portion of the white inhabitants of the country will not submit to the laws of the usurping Government, and seem prepared to resist their enforcement by force of arms, if necessary. The redress and reparation of an admitted blunder—if not worse—is honourable, not degrading, to a great nation like the English. There is yet time for such redress and reparation. Let that time not be lost. If the opportunity be not seized now, and the people of the Transvaal are to be subjugated by fire and sword, we can assure the British authorities this,—they may succeed in crushing the people, but they may depend upon it, unless they carry on a war of extermination, they will always have a discontented and disaffected population, whom they will not be able to keep in subjection without the aid of a large military force. The penalty which England will have to pay for this achievement will be the loss of the last prestige of honour and chivalry, and the undying hatred of every South African from Table Bay to the Limpopo." We need not dwell on the sad and discreditable history of what occurred since these words were uttered. The Colonial Office—every office in Downing Street—is prepared to repeat similar blunders to-morrow and the next day.

The Duke of Edinburgh is returning to England with the Channel Squadron, to prepare for the summer cruise of the amalgamated Reserve and Channel Squadrons.

Rear-Admiral William Henry Whyte has been appointed to succeed Rear-Admiral Wilson as second-in-command of the Channel Squadron. We announced this selection of the Admiralty some weeks back. Since then the Times, and the Press generally, have kindly reproduced our announcement, but have carefully refrained from acknowledging the source from which they derived their information. It is a common thing for Truth and other "society" papers to thus pirate news. We are accustomed to it; even to seeing our own paragraphs reprinted weeks after they first appeared, and quoted as original news, appearing in Truth, the World, and even the Times. Rear-Admiral Whyte assisted H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh whilst Admiral-Superintendent of Naval Reserves. He is senior to Admiral Wilson, whom he relieves.

The appointment of Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, rendered vacant by the promotion of Captain G. Tryon, has been conferred on Captain Nicholson, who commanded the Temeraire at the bombardment of Alexandria.

The Admiralty have performed an act of justice in restoring Major G. A. Heseltine, R.M.L.I., to his former place on the substantive list of Majors, namely, between Majors Morris and Bourchier. We were the first service journal to bring to the notice of their Lordships the case of this most deserving officer. And we are pleased to find that our efforts in the cause of truth and justice have not been unavailing. Major Haseltine having passed the examination in all subjects but tactics necessary to qualify him for the rank of field-officer, was appointed recruiting-officer at Liverpool, and had to enter upon his new duties forthwith. This prevented his going up for the examination in tactics on June 1, 1883, and before the January examination came round, some busybody at the Admiralty discovered that Major Heseltine had not completed his examination. This discovery resulted in Major Haseltine being made to revert to the rank of Captain, and at the same time he was superseded in his appointment at Liverpool. When these facts became known to us, we at once brought them to the notice of the Admiralty. Major Heseltine was then allowed to complete his examination for field-officer in January last, and having passed most creditably in all subjects prior to satisfying the requirements of the Admiralty in tactics, their Lordships restored to him the substantive rank of Major, and they have now given him back his original seniority in that rank. So far, so good; but why should Major Heseltine be allowed to remain out of pocket,—nay, be forced to lose money for having done his duty? Surely he is entitled to compensation for the pecuniary loss he has been made to sustain?

The Admiralty have withdrawn the Red Sea from the East Indies command and have incorporated it in the Mediteranean Station. The Dolphin, Commander Eardley-Wilmot, is ordered to proceed to that part of the station.

The Admiralty method of promulgating orders to the Fleet is certainly a somewhat ludicrous one. On June 12, 1882, a memorandum of 16 pages was issued respecting the method of procedure in regard to naval courts-martial. A note to this memorandum stated that "a circular will be issued as soon as possible revising the instructions in accordance with this memorandum; but it is to come into operation at once, except as regards the employment of shorthand writers and interpreters, for whom it is necessary to establish proper forms of oath by Order in Council." This is nearly two years ago, and yet up to the present the circular which was promised "as soon as possible," has not yet appeared, nor have the proper forms of oath been established for either shorthand-writers or interpreters by Order in Council—although, by the way, one of the former was employed at a recent court-martial at Portsmouth, in spite of the questionable legality of such a step. We presume all this will be rectified by the "forthcoming" addenda, which has been in embryo nearly four years.

The question having been raised, the Admiralty have decided that warrant officers in the Navy, and chief officers in the Coastguard, are entitled to wear on promotion the long-service and good-conduct medal awarded to them previously. This is a just concession, and one that will be highly popular in the Fleet.

A Plymouth paper, in noticing the arrival at the head-quarters at Stonehouse, on Tuesday last, of 60 Royal Marines who had fought at the battle of Tamai, says:—"They speak in the highest possible manner of the conduct of Admiral Hewett and General Graham." It is a pity that, on such occasions as these, the Press should interview the men and quote their opinions upon their superior officers. It is possible that if these opinions had been adverse, they would not have been published; but it is better, in the interests of the service, that anything said by the men, either in praise or otherwise, of the "conduct" of those who commanded them, should not be paraded for general comment.

Rear-Admiral Hoskins left Kildonan on April 19 in the Hawk, on his tour of inspection.

The generosity of the Admiralty in granting an increase of pay of two shillings a day to the lieutenants of the Navy who have ten years' seniority in that rank, and seven years' sea or full-pay time, is not thought much of throughout the service. The Admiralty might just as well have granted the increase of pay to all lieutenants of eight years' seniority and six years' full-pay service. Even then the £7,200 appropriated in the Estimates would scarcely be exceeded, as there are not so very many lieutenants of eight years' seniority who have put in over six or seven years' full-pay time, while many lieutenants of ten years' seniority will fall short of the stipulated seven years' service, and will derive no benefit whatever.

We understand that the Admiralty have adopted as a text-book the work of Mr. Nordenfelt, "On Machine-Guns," recently published by Messrs. Griffin and Co., of Portsea.

Sir W. Hewett, attended by Captain Speedy and his personal Staff, has arrived at the Camp of Ras Aloola, beyond the Miensie Pass. Fifteen hundred Abyssinian cavalry met the Admiral on his arrival on the plateau, and escorted him to the camp of the Abyssinian General, near the village of Asmara, where some two thousand infantry were found drawn up. The great drums were sounded on the Admiral's nearing the camp, and on entering it Sir William Hewett was received with regal state. No other mission has been received with so much honour within the memory of the "oldest inhabitant." This augurs well for the success of Sir William Hewett's mission, the nature of which the Army and Navy Gazette was the first to announce. The Admiral, according to the special correspondent of the Daily News, was to leave Ras Aloola's camp on April 14 for Adowa, to meet King Johannes. We are given to understand that it is considered certain Johannes will accept the proposals Sir William Hewett has to make to him. These are stated, to be that the King shall invade the Soudan, march to the relief of General Gordon in Khartoum, and relieve the Egyptian garrisons, withdrawing them through Abyssinia. In return for this service, the English and Egyptian Governments agree to give to Abyssinia territory claimed by her, and other concessions are to be made to the King; but we can scarcely believe that the British Government seriously contemplates letting loose on the Soudan the most merciless and ferocious savages—Christians though they be called—on the face of the earth, in order to facilitate their work, and to fulfil the task, "rescue and retire." How would such an alliance be regarded in Europe, and what effect could such massacres as are sure to follow the track of Johannes's army have on our Mahommedan subjects? We must hesitate to believe that Admiral Hewett has any mission of the kind confidently assigned to him.

There are rumours afloat that Vice-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh will this year take the Channel and Reserve Squadrons to cruise in the Baltic, visiting Copenhagen, Kiel, Stockholm, and Cronstadt. There can be no doubt that a visit paid to the Russian capital in this manner would tend to increase the friendly feelings of the peoples of the two Empires, by dispelling that mistrust with which their respective Governments at present view each other's actions in the East.

The ships belonging to the Reserve Squadron have been ordered to Portsmouth and Plymouth, by the beginning of May, to refit, previous to their summer cruise. The Squadron is to be ready by June 7.

The commission of the Nelson is drawing to a close, and time it did, for, notwithstanding the popularity of Commodore Erskine, she has in three years lost 250 men by desertion, out of a complement of 500. Surely there must be something radically wrong on board this ship, for the men to desert in such numbers? The case is one that the Admiralty would do well to inquire into. We feel convinced the blame will be found not to attach to the commodore, but to some one on board the Nelson more intimately acquainted with the lower deck.

Mr. Dawson, assistant-paymaster, R.N., having after 15½ years' service in that rank (the longest on record) attained promotion, we trust that the turning-point has been gained, and that from henceforth the improvement in the advance of officers of his rank, as prognosticated by Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, may be shortly developed. In 1874, assistant-paymasters were under 14 years, and in 1864 less than 9 years in that grade; yet in the face of such an increase of service in the junior commissioned grade, hon. members are informed that the Admiralty do not intend making alteration in the arrangement for promotion of the Accountant branch of the Navy, as "better times are in store"!

The Rivista Maritima, of January last, contained an article by Vittorio E. Cuniberti, of the Royal Italian Navy, on a "Mitrailleur Torpedo-hunter" (Mitragliera cacciatorpediniere), which, we think, ought to receive attention from the Naval authorities, if they are not above learning. We cannot test the author's figures, but he claims, as the Americans say, to be able to turn out a vessel of extraordinary speed and armament for the special object of hunting and destroying torpedo vessels; and the experiments made recently at Spezzia and Naples are said to have justified most entirely the pretensions of these new engines of warfare.

Admiral Courbet, who captured Hanoi, is expected home. The French have carried all before them in Tonquin; but still the accounts from that country are not very cheering, for beyond General Millot's outposts all is confusion. In the meantime, the Government are asking the Chamber for more money both for Tonquin and Madagascar. Of course, our neighbours mean to make these expeditions pay in the long run, and to exact indemnities; but for the present the taxpayer must suffer, and he is beginning to grumble in an audible manner.

We are requested to state that the silver cups which have hitherto been held as challenge trophies of the Annual Military Tournaments at Islington will this year be given as the absolute property of the officers winning them in June next. The Royal Military Tournament commences on June 16 next, and lasts for a week. The special mounted competitions for officers for which silver cups are given are tent-pegging, tilting at the ring, lemon-cutting, heads and posts, sword v. sword, and sword v. lance. Entries should be made as soon as possible. Forms can be obtained of the Secretary, Carteret Street, Queen Anne's Gate, S.W.

With this week's number of the Volunteer Service Gazette is published a map of Scotland giving the distribution of the Volunteer Force in the North British command, drawn and compiled by the Rev. Canon Mackay, M.A. As we pointed out when noticing a similar sheet issued a fortnight ago, of England and Wales, the map is most useful, as it shows the head-quarters of each regiment and the number of men of all arms furnished by the several districts.

Now that the French Government is intent upon reducing the period of active service, it is well to hear what some of the critics say who are opposed to this measure, and who have not been perverted like Colonel Burnaby. M. St. Genest has no doubt that young French soldiers would fight as gallantly on the field of battle as our boys did in the Soudan; but he adds:—"The great difficulty in war is not to know how to die, but how to live,—that is to say, to live in the mud, in the snow, without sleep, without food, without anything to drink, and not be demoralised. The difficulty is to preserve enough energy to be able to raise the courage of others. In 1871, I saw at Orleans and at Héricourt men who at the opening of the campaign were gallant young fellows, true patriots, good shots, and who at the end of our terrible retreats flung themselves down on the side of a ditch because, if they had courage, they had no training. They were accustomed neither to fatigue, nor suffering, nor discipline, and no amount of good-will could replace these defects. The consequence was that sometimes a young fellow was seen to be full of spirit, but vanquished in body; while the careless soldier, whose trade it was to fight, continued to march. When people say that we were beaten in the provinces because we had no muskets, that is false; it was because we had no men. When, after Héricourt, an immense army fled in disorder before the little force of Werder, and when we officers of lancers received orders to unearth the moblots and mobilised men who hid themselves by thousands, it was not muskets which we were wanting, but energy. If all these poor lads fled into the farm-houses in tears, it was that they found their sufferings beyond their force, and that, in spite of their education and their distinction, they were unable to support them." When the new law passes, there will be no more one-year volunteers. There is a good deal to be said on both sides of this question. The Spectateur Militaire is favourable to the institution, and says that the volunteer system is indispensable. To quote only one argument of that review,—the writer remarks that the Reserve requires from 800 to 1,000 officers every year, and that nearly all those officers have served as one-year volunteers. He asks if it will not be dangerous to stop this supply. On the other hand, commanding officers complain that these volunteers, who are allowed to sleep and mess out of barracks, give a deal of trouble, while the privates complain that the young gentlemen, because they can pay £60, enjoy privileges which should not exist. There is no doubt, too, that the one-year volunteer system gives rise to many abuses. The Spectateur Militaire urges that the system should be merely improved, not repealed; and that volunteers, on condition of being obliged to serve only one year in the Active Army, should have to serve double time in the Reserve.

A correspondent, a high authority, writes to us from Maritzburg:—"Colonel M. J. Clarke has been well received in Basutoland by the Chief Paramount and the bulk of the people, though Masupha remains intractable. Time only can show whether the Imperial authority can be maintained without some show of force. For my own part, I doubt the probability of such a thing. The whole reopening of the South African difficulty is only a matter of a year or two, for affairs are in a very bad state. Colonel Clarke is, however, a right man in the right place, for he knows the native character, and is not likely to be led into the stupid blunders which Lord Wolseley committed when 'settling' matters with the Zulus, after the late campaign." We believe, however, that Sir Garnet Wolseley's "settlement" was settled at home.

The French have now an Under-Secretary of State for War, who has taken over the administration of the Army. In the Chamber the other day this functionary, M. Casimir-Perier, replied to a Deputy who complained of the quality of the bread furnished to the troops, that if the taste was bad, it was not unwholesome. M. Jules Richard, who keeps a sharp look-out on Military affairs, is terribly afraid that the administration of the Army is going to the devil. Tenders for clothing much lower than those sent in by the firms which had been furnishing the Army for years, were, in a spirit of economy, recently accepted. Now it appears that some of the new contractors cannot muster the necessary capital to meet their engagements. After pointing out several blemishes, M. Jules Richards says:—"Our budget is the budget of a country which expects war. We expend on an average £10,000,000 too much, because our minds are haunted with the idea of war." And the writer finds that France is not, and that the administration is not, in a position to supply the wants of the 1,200,000 men of the Active Army, and the 600,000 men of the Reserve, which would take the field, the first in six and the second in 15 days after being called out. The fact is, that the task will be a very arduous one, and seeing what happened in 1854 and 1870, we can understand the apprehension of M. Jules Richard.

Some curious statistics as to the expenditure of ammunition in 1877 by the Russians are furnished in a German paper. The infantry fired 4,306,358 shots with the Berdan rifle, 6,997,669 with the Kruka, and 2,215 with the Martini. The cavalry fired 168,710 shots with the Berdan carbine, 108,416 with the Kruka, and 121,020 with the revolver—Smith and Wesson. The artillery fired 187,193 cartridges. The Skobeleff division—the 16th—consumed the greatest number of cartridges, 1,421,781. The greatest individual consumption of cartridges was by the 140th Regiment of Infantry at the battle of Kara Hassan Keuy, on August 30, 1877, to wit, 91 rounds for each man. At the siege of Nicopolis, the third battery of the 3rd Brigade fired 180 shot.

The Times of India has published some figures showing the state of the Bengal and Madras Staff Corps. The Bengal Staff Corps contained, on January 1, 1884, the following effective officers:—245 Lieutenant-Colonels, 153 Majors, 211 Captains, 260 Lieutenants in the Staff Corps and 136 on probation—total Subalterns, 396. On January 1, 1883, the numbers were:—222 Lieutenant-Colonels, 185 Majors, 197 Captains, and 395 Subalterns, including probationers. So that during the last year the chief increase has been in the Lieutenant-Colonels, which is, unfortunately, almost a foregone conclusion, and in the Captains, which is altogether exceptional. It will be remembered that Madras has 208 Lieutenant-Colonels, or nearly as many as Bengal, and only 37 Captains. Why one Staff Corps should have all the Captains, and another not be able to muster one per regiment, is one of those beautiful irregularities of the system which baffle all calculations. The only way to equalise matters at all would be for Bengal to hand over a hundred Captains or so to the sister Presidency; but this is an arrangement which would, we fancy, meet with strenuous opposition on the part of the officers concerned. It is generally accepted as a fact that promotion in the Bengal Army is much more rapid than in that of Bombay; but a study of the Army List before us hardly bears out this view. For instance, in Bombay there are three Cavalry regiments out of six commanded by Majors. In Bengal, six of the Cavalry Commandants are full Colonels, and the remainder are Lieutenant-Colonels. In Infantry regiments, 30 are commanded by full Colonels, and 11 by Lieutenant-Colonels, no Major—except in an irregular corps like the Bhopal Battalion—holding a command. In the Punjaub Cavalry, including the famous Guides, the Commandants are all full Colonels or Lieutenant-Colonels, and in the Punjaub Frontier Force the proportion is eight of the former to two of the latter.

In the Progrès Militaire we find an article complaining of the General Staff calling out all the men of the Territorial Army at the same time. The other day, there was snow in the Vosges and the Ardennes, and yet no blankets were provided for the Territorials, nothing but a small mattress. Some of the contingents sent to the Northern and Eastern forts seem to have suffered a good deal, but "in spite of the snow," says the Progrès, "the men did their duty. These battalions receive a strong contingent of Parisians, and yet discipline was maintained, and no severe punishments were inflicted. On seeing the immense defensive works with which General Rivière has garnished our frontier, these men, who belong to all the social classes of the capital, experienced a feeling of confidence. Many of them could not conceal their surprise at seeing the way in which the works are armed, the magazines full, and the garrisons at their post as if about to stand a siege. 'The state of our forts gives us confidence,' said they to their officers; 'when we return to Paris, we shall tell our friends and comrades that they may be tranquil with regard to the future.'" The Progrès thinks that the fact of France being able to look forward without apprehension to an attack on the part of Germany will produce a beneficial effect on the masses.

The recent creation of a fortress artillery in France does not seem to be to the taste of the Journal des Sciences Militaires. The fact of the new frontier bristling with fortresses leads the paper in question to fear that, in the event of an invasion, the same mistake will be committed as in 1870,—that the French troops will be disseminated along the frontier, and that the deplorable system of a thin cordon will again be resorted to. The Journal des Sciences Militaires says:—"We have constructed too many strong places, large and small, since the war. The first are dangerous, as constituting so many baneful centres of attraction for our armies, for we shall run the risk of seeing them shut up in these places on the first check they experience [as in the case of Metz]. As for the lesser forts with which the country has been encumbered, besides absorbing a considerable effective for their garrisons, they will merely hamper the movements of our armies, far from rendering those movements more easy, which ought to be the essential part for fortifications to play." At the time that Parliament voted enormous sums for the new fortifications considered necessary after the loss of Metz, Strasburg, and other bulwarks, a good many military men raised their voices against the system of over-fortification, which in the end prevailed. They argued that the money might be better spent, that the force of the French Army lies in a sudden onset and in an impetuous dash, and that a General, having for his basis a large fortified place or an entrenched camp, is prone to cling to it, and, as the Journal des Sciences Militaires says, to shut himself up there in the event of a reverse. The objection which the paper in question has to the fortress artillery arises from the fear of seeing the field artillery weakened. A defender of the fortress artillery points out that Germany, with fewer strong places than France, has a more numerous fortress artillery, while her field artillery is not so strong as that of France, numerically speaking.

He commanded irregular cavalry under Sir R. Napier in pursuit of Tantia Topee and Feroze Shah (twice mentioned in despatches; Victoria Cross, medal, and promotion). Cochrane dashed forward at a gallop, under a heavy musketry and artillery fire, driving the enemy from the gun, and kept possession of it till the company came up. 46th Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry. We regret to have to record, says the Egyptian Gazette, the death of Major John Joseph Forsyth Grant, 2nd Batn., which took place at London on the 3rd inst. The deceased officer had seen a deal of service abroad, principally at Malta, North America, Bermuda and Gibraltar. At the latter station he was elected Master of the "Calpe Hunt;" he also took a lively part in the race meetings. Arriving at Alexandria with his battalion on July 23, 1882, he was present at the reconnaissance at Ramleh on August 5, and the actions at El Magfar, Tel-el-Mahuta, and Kassassin on August 28. Whilst encamped at the latter place, he was taken with a severe attack of dysentery and was invalided home. Having rejoined his regiment at Ramleh early in March, 1883, Major Grant will be remembered by many for the interest he took in polo, &c. Dysentery having again attacked him during last summer he was admitted into the Deaconesses' Hospital, where every care and attention was given to him, and having slighly improved he was recommended to proceed to England and left early in September last. Finding his health remained unchanged, the deceased officer resolved to leave the service, as intimated in our columns of the 22nd ult., he, however, succumbed to his disease before his retirement had been gazetted. Much regret is felt by all ranks in the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry at the loss of one whose career was characterised by the highest integrity and the attributes of a true and loyal soldier. 93rd Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. Lord Archibald Campbell writes:—"I observe a short leader on a subject which never fails to rouse my indignation, nor am I solitary in such feelings. You assert now that, notwithstanding all our wars, big and little, with the War-Office people, that they even now show a 'cussedness' which is almost unbelievable. Truth, however, is stranger than fiction in Pall Mall. You assert that the tartan of the old 93rd Sutherland Highlanders is to be changed to that worn by some 'Skye Bodies.' I hope this is a mistake. It is incredible that the handsome and historic tartan, as painted by Ramsay on one of the Earls of Sutherland, Earl William, 1763, now at Dunrobin Castle, should not continue to be worn by the descendants of the famous 93rd. I, for one, am game to harass the authorities at any moment should this prove true, and put myself at the disposal of all and any who are of my opinion. I reserve for another letter (should it be needful) the real reason why the 91st and 93rd were linked together under the new system. I hope, however, I shall not be called on to do so by the obstinacy of the people who evolve all changes of tartan without knowledge of the subject." A match was fired on Saturday at Possil Range, between the serjeants of the 5th Lanarkshire R.V. and an equal number of serjeants of the 93rd stationed at Maryhill Barracks,—distances 200, 500, and 600 yards, 7 rounds at each,—when the 93rd won by 52 points.

98th North Staffordshire Regiment. Lieut. Randolph is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Crocodile.

106th Durham Light Infantry. Major R. H. F. R. Brownrigg died at Didsbury, near Manchester, on the 17th inst., aged 32 years. The deceased, who was adjutant of the 16th Lancashire R.V., entered the Army April 24, 1872; became capt., Dec. 14, 1878, and major, March 14, 1883.

2nd West India Regiment. The Natal Witness says:—"Lieut. Egerton has been appointed fort adjutant at Cape Coast Castle. This officer, it will be remembered, gained his first commission for saving the colours of the 94th in the engagement at Bronker's Spruit in the Boer war. He was at that time serving as a conductor in the Commissariat and Transport Department, and as such had served in the Zulu war of 1879, and in the subsequent operations against Sekukuni (medal with clasp). Lieut. Egerton, who commenced his military service in the ranks of the late 75th Regt., was promoted warrant officer after little more than two years' duty in the ranks. His last active service was in the defence of Pretoria against the Boers."

Gallwey, and J. Latchford, and Surg. A. L. Browne. Surg.-Major J. Latchford has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on private affairs.

Pay Department. The issue of the New Warrant has been unavoidably postponed, and will not appear for some weeks to come. The cause of this delay is that further consideration is being given to several important alterations affecting the Department.

MILITIA.

Royal Scots. The remains of Col. the late Duke of Buccleuch were interred in St. Mary's Episcopal Chapel, within the grounds of Dalkeith House, on Wednesday. On a brass plate on the coffin was the following inscription:—"Walter Francis Montagu Douglas Scott, fifth Duke of Buccleuch, seventh Duke of Queensberry. Born Nov. 25, 1808; died April 16, 1884." The Dalkeith Volunteers were formed up on the lawn in front of the house, one company as a guard of honour, and the remainder lining the route. The coffin was carried by non-commissioned officers of the 3rd Batn. Royal Scots from the house to the chapel.

21st Royal Scots Fusiliers. Lieut. Douglas, 3rd Batn., has obtained a certificate from the School of Instruction at Wellington Barracks.

The 3rd Brig., Southern Division, R.A. (late Isle of Wight Artillery), will be trained this year at Sandown Barracks, which will in future be the head-quarters of the regiment, instead of Carisbrooke Castle.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The Standard says:—"The ensuing season will witness the largest attendance of Volunteers in Camps of Exercise and Instruction that has been recorded in the history of the organisation. Camps will be formed in every military district, the total estimated attendance being upwards of 60,000, exclusive of the annual musters at Shoeburyness for the Artillery, Aldershot for the Infantry, and Chatham for the Engineers. In the Northern District alone, the list of camps sanctioned, and for which a Government grant of upwards of £18,000 has been approved, amounts to 65 for regiments from Lancashire, Cheshire, Yorkshire, Warwickshire, Durham, Northumberland, Derbyshire, Staffordshire, Nottinghamshire, Herefordshire, Flintshire, Carnarvonshire, Denbighshire, and Northamptonshire. In the home district, camps of exercise have been sanctioned for 18 regiments, at a total estimated cost to the country of about £2,500. It is officially notified that the numbers applying to form regimental camps throughout the country has been so much in excess of the amount provided in the annual Estimates, that it has been deemed necessary to limit the amount for each corps."

THE PORTSMOUTH REVIEW.

The following General Order has been issued by his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief:—"His Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has once more the pleasure of expressing to his Serene Highness Gen. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar his entire satisfaction with the drill, bearing, and appearance of the Volunteers alike on the field-day at Portsmouth on Easter Monday, and throughout the operations which preceded it. Their behaviour in quarters and in the town of Portsmouth has been excellent, and their movements on the field-day showed a steadiness and a smartness which would have been creditable to trained soldiers. Those Volunteers who took part in the march down to Portsmouth previous to the field-day cannot fail to have derived from it much instruction. Such marches and the accompanying practices in various duties form a very valuable kind of training, which, on this occasion, appears to have been thoroughly and efficiently carried out. During the field-day itself, certain tactical errors may have been observed, concerning which his Royal Highness will only remark that they were in no respect due to the Volunteers themselves, whose drill and discipline left little to be desired. They were, to a great extent, caused by the difficulties which must of necessity attend the management of troops when the theatre of operations is limited in extent, and covered with spectators. Satisfactory as it is to find so much interest taken in these reviews, it cannot be denied that the presence of large crowds of lookers-on—surrounding and almost mingling with the troops themselves—has, in a military sense, a disadvantageous effect. The conduct of the Volunteers, however, during the field-day, and the quiet and order with which they assembled and entrained at its conclusion, were, in his Royal Highness's judgment, deserving of the highest praise. His Royal Highness desires to thank Gen. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and his staff for the very complete arrangements made by them in all respects, to which the success of these operations is in no small degree to be attributed. The Volunteers, who have now for the fifth time in succession enjoyed the advantage of manœuvring under this General Officer's command, will, his Royal Highness feels assured, regret no less than he does the approaching termination of Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar's command of the Southern District. His Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has further great satisfaction in stating that he has received from Major-Gen. Newdigate, commanding the South-Eastern District, a highly favourable report of the soldier-like manner in which the Volunteers acquitted themselves at the recent military operations and field-day near Dover. These were well organised, and carried out in a manner that reflects very great credit on all who took part in them.—By command, (Signed,) Wolseley. April 19, 1884."

The following observations by Lieut.-Gen. Sir Archibald Alison, Bart., K.C.B., on the manœuvres carried out at Aldershot on Easter Monday have been issued:—"The position of the Fox Hills, covering Aldershot, is very extended and, when held by an adequate force, a very strong one; but when occupied by a small force, in the presence of a superior enemy, it is a very difficult and a dangerous one; for, once the enemy get on the top of the plateau (and with a small force this can hardly be prevented) all advantage of ground is lost, and the superiority of numbers is immediately felt. This was the case on Easter Monday. The Northern force numbered some 3,300 men, with 24 guns; the Southern only 2,400, with 22 guns. The plan for the Northern force was well conceived and well executed. Once this force had established itself on the summit, the result could not be doubted. The flanks of the Southern force were turned by superior numbers, and it had to fall back. The Volunteers (the 11th Middlesex and the 1st Berkshire) did very well, and were well kept in hand. Mistakes on both sides were, of course committed, but they mainly resulted from overzeal and anxiety."

Audacious, Capt. Pearson, flagship of Vice-Admiral Dowell, was at Hong Kong on March 9. The Hampshire Telegraph says:—"Vice-Admiral Sir William Dowell, the new Commander-in-Chief, and staff arrived in the P. and O. Company's steamer Siam, after a remarkably quick passage from Singapore, on Sunday, the 2nd inst. He at once hoisted his flag on board the Cleopatra, and saluted Admiral Willes with 15 guns. Admiral Dowell, Capt. Pearson, Mr. Row, secretary, and Mr. Farquhar, flag-lieutenant, then paid a visit to Admiral Willes, on board the Audacious, and were afterwards entertained at dinner by him. Admiral Dowell subsequently transferred his flag to the Vigilant, pro tem. At 4 o'clock on the afternoon of the 4th, Admiral Willes, after taking farewell of the officers on the quarter-deck, formally left the Audacious for the P. and O. Company's steamer Ganges, lying out in the stream, the ship's company manning yards and the foreign men-of-war saluting with 15 guns as he was rowed on board. Of his staff, Capt. Tracey and Mr. Perry, secretary, only go home with him. Mr. Levett, flag-lieut., remains in China, a marriage having been arranged between him and one of the daughters of Sir Harry Parkes, British Ambassador to the Court of Pekin. The Ganges left for England early on the morning of the 5th inst. At 8 o'clock the same morning Admiral Dowell broke his flag on board the Audacious, the Victorieuse, French flagship, Stosch, German flagship, the Italian frigate Christofero Colombo, and the Russian corvette Naedznik each saluting with 15 guns, at the conclusion of which the band of the ship played the French, German, Italian, and Russian anthems alternately, the whole forming rather an imposing ceremony, and one could not help remarking how pretty and appropriate the British ensign looked flying at the masthead of a foreign man-of-war, whilst salutes were thundered forth in its honour. The German Admiral, who was relieved by a Commodore on the 4th, also goes home with Admiral Willes in the Ganges. The relief of this appointment entailed additional saluting, so that an almost continual cannonading has been kept up since Sunday last. Before leaving the ship Admiral Willes addressed a letter to the officers and men, expressing his pleasure and gratification at the general efficiency of the ship and the behaviour of the ship's company since she had carried his flag, thereby setting such a high example to the squadron. The crew of the Vigilant turned over from the Tweed on the 18th, the latter being turned over to the Reserve on the 26th. The Linnet and German gunboat Wolf left for Canton early on the morning of the 24th. The Wivern went out for a trial of her machinery on the 25th, returning to her moorings again in the evening. We ourselves went out to expend our quarter's ammunition on the morning of the 25th, returning again on the 28th. We came to an anchor each night at the back of the island in Titam Bay, 'manning' and 'arming' ship by electric light at 10 o'clock. The Vigilant came out with a mail on the 26th, and left again with Admiral Willes on board for Canton the following morning. She returned from Canton on the 29th. The Fly arrived from Canton on the 28th, and the Cleopatra from Shanghai on the 29th. The Merlin left for Pakhoi on the 2nd inst. The French cruiser Tourville and the American paddle-frigate Monocacy, which arrived from Shanghai on the 1st inst., left here on the 4th. The Russian corvette Naedznik left on the 3rd. The French gunboat Lutin arrived from Canton on the 1st, and the American sloop Essex on the 4th inst. There were altogether, one day last week, no fewer than 13 foreign men-of-war of different nationalities at anchor in the harbour. At present we have here the Victorieuse, Triomphante, Lutin, and Volta, French; the Leipzig and Stosch, German; the Christoforo Colombo, Italian; and the Essex, American man-of-war. Since writing the foregoing, the new French flagship La Galissionnaire, with Rear-Admiral Leepes on board, has arrived here. The La Galissionnaire carries six 9½-in. and four 4½-in. guns, and six inches of armour. She was built in 1872, and steams 13 knots. Ships in harbour are flag, Cleopatra, Swift, Wivern, Vigilant, and Fly; Admiral Dowell is inquiring into the circumstances attending the non-relief of the Kestrel, at present at Tientsin, whose time on the station has long since expired, the Midge having been expressly commissioned last December to relieve her." Letters have been received at the Admiralty from the Commander-in-Chief at Hong Kong, dated March 18. The Audacious was at Hong Kong, and remains; the Daring was at Hong Kong, and will relieve the Linnet at Canton; the Swift was at Hong Kong, and will shortly proceed to Amoy; the Kestrel was at Hong Kong, refitting, preparatory to proceeding to England, viâ Singapore, Batavia, Seychelles, Aden, and Suez Canal; the Fly was at Hong Kong, refitting, and would be complete about the end of the month; the Vigilant was at Hong Kong, and remains; the Cleopatra was at Amoy, and would proceed to Shanghai to take the place of the Champion; the Sapphire was at Japan, and was to be at Yokohama on March 13; the Champion was at Shanghai on March 5 as senior officer's ship, North China Division, was to be relieved by the Cleopatra, and proceed to Hong Kong to make good defects; the Curaçoa was at Chinkiang, and was at Woosung on March 12; the Midge was in the Gulf of Pechili, was at Chefoo on March 7, and would leave on March 8 for Tientsin; the Cockchafer was in the Gulf of Pechili, and at Chefoo on March 7, and would remain; the Pegasus was at Acheen on March 1; the Linnet was at Canton on March 17, and will be relieved by the Daring; the Albatross was at Kinkiang on March 5, and remains; the Zephyr was at Singapore on March 1, and remains; the Foxhound was at Foochow on Feb. 29, and remains; the Merlin was in the Gulf of Tonquin, alternately visiting Hoihow and Pakhoi, and was at Pakhoi on March 7; the Espoir was at Hankow on March 5, and remains; the Flying Fish was surveying in the neighbourhood of Haitan Straits; the Magpie was at Singapore on March 18, preparing to leave for England, viâ Batavia, Seychelles, Aden, and Suez Canal.

COCKATRICE, Com. MacIlwaine, left Malta for Constantinople and Galatz on April 23.

CROCODILE, Capt. Carr, passed Malta on April 20 on passage home, but did not touch at the port, owing to the case of cholera which occurred on board while in the Suez Canal.

CYGNET, Lieut. and Com. Jauncey, has been ordered from Port Said to Alexandria on April 24.

DART, Lieut. and Com. W. U. Moore, left Hobart on Feb. 23 for Sweetwater River, on surveying duties; was due in Sydney about March 20.

DRYAD, Com. Hulton, was at Bombay on April 24.

EUPHRATES, Capt. St. J. Gasforth, left Aden on April 19 for Suez.

FLIRT, Com. Craigie, arrived at Madeira on April 18, on passage to Cape Coast Castle.

HIMALAYA, Capt. Palliser, arrived in Plymouth Sound on April 18. She brought home the crews of the Daring, Dryad, and London. The crew of the Dryad, who have returned in her, have been away on the East Indies station for four-and-a-half years. The Dryad's commission has been by no means an uneventful one. The duty of protecting British interests during the operations of the French in Madagascar, for which the Dryad was specially detailed, and the consequent friction between the French and English authorities arising out of the French Admiral's high-handed proceedings, furnished plenty of excitement for the men, and effectually relieved any monotony they might otherwise have felt. On their way home, after being relieved by the new crew sent out from England, they were detained in the Red Sea to participate in the operations against Osman Digna. Only a machine-gun's crew of 25 men, together with the Marines of the ship, went to the front and took part in the fighting, but the rest of the men were actively and usefully employed ashore, garrisoning Suakim, building landing-stages, and particularly in assisting in the transportation of stores and ammunition, and the debarkation and embarkation of troops at Trinkitat. The men who went to the front are unanimous in their praise of the prowess and bravery of their Arab foes, and describe the fighting, particularly at Tamai, as being fierce and the slaughter terrible. At this battle the Arabs poured in upon the broken square and attacked the Naval Brigade after only some 200 rounds had been fired from the machine-guns worked by the bluejackets. The sailors did their utmost to save the guns, fighting hand to hand with their fierce assailants after the ammunition supply had been cut off by the 65th Regiment getting between the limber and the guns. They then strove to drag their guns away with them. In this desperate struggle Lieut. Houston Stewart, who commanded the men from the Dryad's new crew, was wounded by a spear thrust whilst defending his gun. Owing to the unevenness of the ground the guns had to be abandoned, but not before they were spiked. The Naval Brigade fell back about 400 yards, fighting desperately as they slowly retreated. It was during the retreat that Lieut. Houston Stewart was shot. Lieut. Heathcote was in charge of the gun manned by the men from the Dryad's old crew, and he was exceptionally fortunate, for of the five naval lieutenants present three were killed and one was wounded, and he alone was unhurt. The men greatly praised the marines who formed the rear line of the first square for their steadiness, which materially contributed towards the ultimate repulse of the Arabs, and attribute the reformation of the square without greater loss of life to the timely assistance rendered by General Buller's brigade at the critical juncture. On the Arabs being driven back, the Naval Brigade advanced slowly, firing as they went, and retook their guns. Of the Dryad's men only two were killed. After the battle was over, the various weapons used by the Arabs were found profusely scattered over the ground, and many of the men have brought home, as trophies of the war, Arab spears, shields, and knives picked up on the battle-field. Sub-Lieut. Tynedale Biscoe, who is amongst the officers on board the Himalaya, is the bearer of one of Osman Digna's flags for presentation to Lord Northbrook. The flag was one of two captured at the battle of El Teb, the other having been brought home by Lieut. Lloyd, and presented to the Queen. Besides Lieut. Heathcote and Sub-Lieut. Biscoe, the officers who took passage in the Himalaya were Pymr. Wills, Fleet Surg. Rankin, Lieuts. Knowles, Turner, and Osborne, Sub-Lieuts. Hall, Booth, Simpson, and Nelson, Chief Engineer Hall, Engineers McEwen and Rattenbury, Assist.-Engineer Noble, and Mr. Voules, clerk. Lady Crichton and child were also passengers, as well as the following military officers:—Lieuts. Austin, Woodward, D'Eyncourt, and Surg. Johnson. The Himalaya, according to present arrangements, is to leave Devonport in about 14 days' time to execute the work of transferring the Irish Militia from Ireland to Aldershot. The Himalaya has been visited by Mr. Glenn, Constructor from the Admiralty; Mr. Cock, Constructor of Devonport Dockyard; and Mr. Turpin, foreman of shipwrights, with a view to ascertaining what defects were needed to be executed before the ship left Devonport again. The carpenter's report showed a large number of defects, while that of the chief engineer indicated that the steam starting-gear had broken down, and would have to be renewed. The Himalaya will therefore proceed to Keyham to have her repairs executed.

INFLEXIBLE, Capt. Seymour, arrived at Malta on April 24.

MALABAR, Capt. Harris, left Gibraltar on April 21 for Plymouth.

MIRANDA, Com. Acland, returned to Sydney from Hobart Town on Feb. 28. While at the latter place the time was largely spent in amusements, of which the principal was the squadron regatta, the ships in port being the Nelson (flagship), Diamond, Miranda, Raven, and Dart. The Miranda left Hobart Town for Sydney on Feb. 23, and on the next day a strong gale of wind set in which rapidly increased almost to an hurricane, accompanied by very heavy seas. Two huge seas broke clean over the ship, washing away one of the upper deck ports and carrying away a portion of the netting on the port bow. Besides this the captain's galley was stove in, and other minor damage done. The gale subsided in about forty-eight hours, and the Miranda was then able to make a twelve hours' full speed trial, during which an average speed was attained of 8½ knots.

NELSON, Comdre. Erskine, was at Sydney, N.S.W., when the mail left. The correspondent of the Western Morning News says:—"Her three years' commission expires in June, when it is expected that a new crew will be sent out from England. It will be necessary, however, for the Admiralty to do something more than to send out extra ship's corporals and men who have served five years, as neither have had the effect of checking desertion. The Nelson arrived on the station from England in Jan., 1882, with a complement of 500, exclusive of officers, and the number of desertions from her to this date is over 250, only very few of whom have been apprehended or have returned." Letters have been received at the Admiralty from the Commodore at Sydney dated March 12. The Nelson was at Sydney on March 12, where she remains (since reported there on April 6). The Diamond was at Hobart on March 8, about to proceed to Sydney; the Espiègle was at Wellington, New Zealand, on March 2, and about to proceed to Sydney, viâ Auckland; the Miranda was at Sydney on March 12, where she remains for the present; the Dart was at Spring Bay, Tasmania, on March 7, and would proceed to Sydney about March 31; the Lark was at Auckland on March 6, and would proceed about March 15 to Solomon Islands; the Raven was at Launceston on March 7, and would proceed to Sydney about March 21; the Swinger was at Adelaide on March 10, en route to Sydney.

NORTHAMPTON, Capt. Digby, flagship of Vice-Admiral Commerell, was at Bermuda on April 9, and will proceed to Halifax about May 18; the Garnet left Jamaica on March 20 for Belize, Colon, Carthagena, and proceeds thence to Barbadoes division to assume duties of senior officer's ship; the Tenedos was on passage to Halifax and Newfoundland; the Dido was at Bermuda on April 9, refitting; the Flamingo was at Bermuda refitting at same date, and would proceed to the Jamaica division for general service about April 24; the Fantôme and Mallard were at Bermuda, refitting for the Newfoundland fisheries at same date.

OSBORNE, Com. Holland, arrived at Sheerness on April 25, to be in readiness to convey H.R.H. the Prince of Wales and suite to the Continent, to attend the Royal wedding at Darmstadt.

PELICAN, Com. Hope, went outside Plymouth Breakwater for trial of her engines on April 19. She was inspected on April 23 by Capt. Bosanquet, and sailed for the Pacific station on April 24.

SULTAN, Capt. Sir W. Hunt Grubbe, returned to Malta to repair defects on April 21.

SWIFTSURE, Capt. Aitchison, flagship of Rear-Admiral Lyons, with the Mutine in company, would leave Callao for Honolulu and Vancouver on May 4. The Constance arrived at Honolulu on April 13, and would leave at once for Esquimault.

SYLVIA, Lieut. Dyke, in charge, arrived at Simon's Town on April 19 from the Magellan Straits to meet Capt. Pelham Aldrich, appointed to succeed Capt. Wharton, promoted to be Hydrographer to the Admiralty.

TEMERAIRE, Capt. Nicholson, was paid off at Malta on April 14, and was recommissioned on April 15 by Capt. Domville.

TYNE, Com. Cochrane, arrived at Port Said on April 19, and would leave on April 20.

VALIANT. Capt. Knowles and officers gave an afternoon dance on board this ship at Bantry on April 16 to which the élite of Bantry and the surrounding neighbourhood received invitations. The day proved propitious, and dancing was kept up with great enthusiasm from half-past 2 till 7 o'clock. This vessel will be inspected by the Admiral-Superintendent of Naval Reserves at her station during his present tour in Ireland, and is, after that is finished, under orders to proceed to Devonport, to undergo extensive repairs.

Nine appointments of lieutenants on probation to the Royal Marine Artillery will be made by the Admiralty on Sept. 1 next. These appointments will be open to candidates who compete at the approaching examination for admission to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, as well as to those who competed at the examination which was held in December last. Two commissions in the Royal Marine Light Infantry will be offered to candidates who compete for admission to the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, at the approaching examination. Gentlemen being desirous of being placed on the list of candidates for these appointments, should apply to the Secretary of the Admiralty; the fact of a candidate having his name placed on the list of the Royal Marines will not debar him from accepting an appointment to Woolwich or Sandhurst, should his place in the competition render him eligible for entry.

The Jumna, Capt. Singleton, which left Suakim on March 30, arrived at Portsmouth on Monday morning with the M Baty. 1st Brig., R.A., which left India on Feb. 6, but was disembarked at Suakim; Major Holley, Capt. Ind, Lieut. Dixon, and 183 men, who left Portsmouth for Woolwich on Tuesday morning; the 10th Hussars; the 1st Batn. of the York and Lancaster Regt.; the 2nd Batn. Royal Irish Fusiliers; 129 Marines of both arms for Forton and Eastney, and various detachments from India. There were about 25 invalids for Netley, of whom 18 were under treatment for wounds received in the Soudan. Among these were the following, who received spear wounds at Tamasi: Lieuts. Littledale, York and Lancaster Regt., in left shoulder, Gordon, Black Watch, wounds in the hand and arm; Surg. Cross, R.N., wound in the forehead; and Surg. Prendergast, who was speared in the back while attending to the wounded, but is now on the way to convalescence. The wives and families of the troops had for the most part been previously sent home in the Serapis. The ship was very crowded, and the men complained of the bitter cold experienced during the voyage after the tropical weather they had had in the desert. During the voyage Pte. Trueman, Portsmouth Division, Royal Marines, died from enteric fever.

The question of providing storage for the gun mountings which have recently been transferred from the War Office to Admiralty charge is under consideration. The mountings to be kept at Portsmouth for the present relate to the Sultan, Hercules, Cormorant, Shah, Triumph, Emerald, Calliope, Cordelia, Volage, Active, Naval Reserve, R.M.A., R.M.L.I., Colossus, Rupert, Imperieuse, Edinburgh, Minotaur, Bacchante, and Duke of Wellington.

The committee at Portsmouth have recommended the Admiralty to select Forton Lake for the formation of a torpedo-ground. It is understood that the original estimate will be considerably exceeded.

The Admiralty have given directions for the construction of two new despatch-vessels, in the place of the Lively, which was wrecked in June, 1883, on the Hen and Chicken Rock, off Stornoway, and the Salamis, which was condemned last autumn as unfit for further service, and subsequently broken up at Sheerness Yard. The new vessels are to be named the Surprise and Alacrity, and will be considerably larger than the vessels of the Salamis type, of which there are at present only two in the British Navy, viz., the Helicon, attached to the Mediterranean Squadron, and the Vigilant, on the China station.

Analysing the results of the machine-gun experiments recently made in India by Gen. Hardinge, the Hampshire Telegraph remarks that:—"All this serves to prove the value of machine-guns in the field. From the above results it is made self-evident that the two machine-guns seen on Monday under Fort Widley, supporting Col. Moncrieff's advance, were as good to Gen. Monck as eight mountain-guns firing shrapnel, and better, for the two machine-guns only employed 30 men, whereas the artillery would have required over 100, besides horses. These facts alone prove the value of machine-guns mounted on magazine carriages. Mounted on limber and trail, they can be cut off from their ammunition, as they were in the Soudan, when they become useless. Hence the question of how to mount machine-guns for landing purposes should be considered without delay by the Admiralty."

Army & Navy Gazette.
LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 26, 1884.

IN an article on "Army Organisation," which we notice elsewhere, the Quarterly Review has "bearded the lion in his den, the Douglas in his hall,"—or, as Douglas never wore a kilt, even if he ever saw one, and as he certainly never could have seen a feather bonnet, we must put Campbell for Douglas and expose the Quarterly, "so savage and tartanly," to the fiery wrath of Lord Archibald. The reviewer, in a strong and, for the most part, exceedingly well-reasoned and judicious article on the short-comings and long wanderings in its dealings with the Army of the curious institution called the War Office, comments on the uniform question of the so-called Highland regiments as follows :—

> "Why the kilt, the most inconvenient and barbarous dress ever worn, should have been forced of late on fresh regiments, instead of being discarded by all, we are quite at a loss to imagine. Is the War Office credulous enough to believe that the kilt, being the national dress of Scotland, is therefore popular with Scotchmen? It had well-nigh ceased to be heard of beyond the Grampians, it was virtually unknown in the Lowlands, till the Court established itself at Balmoral and the game of clan-gathering was revived. And as to the so-called Highland soldier, is he ever seen, except when in full dress for walking out, or for duty, in the barrack-yard, in the canteen, in the recreation room, in any other nether garment than the trews? And if the kilt be barbarous, the feather bonnet is at once ridiculous and uncomfortable. Watch a Highland regiment advancing in line against a strong head wind, and observe how sorely the men are put to it to keep their bonnets from being blown off—an accident which, in spite of chin-straps, is apt to befal them. Besides, you have only to turn up the engravings in Grose's 'Military Antiquities' to satisfy yourself that when the Black Watch was first formed, and for half a century after, the round blue bonnet, or scone, was worn without any ornamentation except the single eagle's feather which distinguished the head-gear of the officer from that of the private. This surely is a case in which the Great Wizard, who created our interest in the Highlands, may claim to be heard : 'Rob Roy remained for some time standing on the rock . . . . . . conspicuous by his long gun, waving tartans, and the single plume in his cap, which in those days denoted the Highland gentleman and soldier; although I observe that the present military taste has decorated the Highland bonnet with a quantity of black plumage resembling that which is borne before funerals.'"

But, indeed, as we have felt all along, the question really is not whether the kilt be national and the bonnet old or new,—we may, if we like, believe that from mere wilfulness, or scantiness of material, the inhabitants of the bleak North insisted on leaving their legs exposed to the weather, honoris causâ, and that the favourite pastime of the chiefs and their gillies was hunting ostriches for the sake of the feathers to put in their bonnets, or we may hold that the kilt was worn only locally by certain tribes at various times, and that the bonnet is a fantastic and comparatively modern innovation,—but the fact is that they have both been adopted by, or given to, famous regiments as parts of national characteristic uniforms, and that Scotchmen, Lowland and Highland, are in favour of retaining them, and that is surely the main point to be considered from an administrative point of view. If we ask why the Scotch regiments should be so specially favoured, when the Line battalions—some of them, at least, as famous as the best of the northern battalions, and some both famous and ancient—should be ruthlessly assimilated, amalgamated, and harmoniously wholed into hideous uniformity, the answer, logically considered in its relations to the reasons for the special privileges of the Scotchmen, would not be very easy. The authority and taste of the Queen naturally are commanding influences in matters of uniform. The Princes of the Royal Family—and their support counts for a good deal—are all Highlanders in Scotland, though they do not go out stalking in feather bonnets. Then again, there is a love for the picturesque to be studied, and Scotchmen have made up their minds that kilt and bonnet, and even the white spat over a coarse ancle, a thin shank and a big foot, les trois se disent, sometimes are romantic and becoming. They like the stories they hear about their enemies being appalled by "devils in petticoats," and mistaken expeditions of amatory Bedouins on bare-legged soldiery. Albanians and such like may wear kilts and blow bagpipes, but they "canna fa'" the feather-bonnet; their kilts are of white stuff, puir deils, instead of tartan; and their pipes are "lean and scrannel;" anyway, if we can get Highlanders or Lowlanders to join the Scotch regiments on condition that they are uniformed as the national regiments were which have conferred such renown on their country and added such glory to our arms, we think it advisable to grant their terms. The loyalty of Scotchmen to the House of Hanover one hundred and forty years ago was rather mixed, and the Duke of Cumberland would have been much astonished if he had been asked to put a considerable proportion of the English Army into kilts, and to develope the national sentiment by patronising the clan tartans in the country north of the Grampians; but there is now no passion, as it may be called, more intense in Scotland than personal devotion to the Queen and the members of that House, notwithstanding the robust Radicalism which gives the most advanced Liberals to the ranks of the democratic and semi-republican party in the House of Commons. If the Scotch people insist on feather-bonnet and kilts, sporrans, and spleuchans, and what not,—amen! We wish they would demand the abolition of the tartan trews. Surely there was never devised any more unbecoming, monstrous incongruity of dress than the feather-bonnet, the tartan scarf, and the plaid trews! That can not be national, anyway. Perhaps the day may come when it will not be unsafe to trust the Queen's colours to the keeping of warriors in green tunics, with shamrocks in their "caubeens" and "sunbursts" over their heads, wearing saffron shirts and glibbes, marching to the music of a hundred pipers from Tara! But it does not seem likely. However, if the country could get 50,000 men to be depended on in stress of battle on such terms, and keep the supply up for ever, we say "amen" to that again.

We have abstained from any reference to the Congo Treaty—which promises to add materially to the controversial topics with which the Foreign Office has to deal—because it relates to questions which are somewhat outside the province of a service journal; but the Navy, which has had duties of no very agreeable nature to execute on the coast in times past, is naturally interested in the disputed settlement of rights which may lead to an extension of its work in those uninviting seas and lagoons, of which it knows too much already. We confess to a want of sympathy with what is called "trade" on the Congo, for the simple reason that the articles which the traders import most largely are rum, gunpowder, and arms, and that it is generally bad and immoral in conduct and principles, as well as materials. The worthy merchant who expressed the opinion, as recorded in a contemporary, that "the Portuguese are pison out of Portugal," artlessly confessed that, for the many years he had been trading on the Congo, he had imported these civilising and anti-Portuguese specifics, rum and gunpowder, to the extent of one-third of the whole of his merchandise; and we know that the general "trade on the Congo" has not been conducive to the spread of religion, temperance, or civilisation of any kind, though the missionaries may have had some success in restraining the excesses of the "merchants" and moderating the passions of the natives. The traders who are so anxious to keep all the good things to themselves are neither grateful to the Portuguese, who, whatever their recent deterioration, were the pioneers of trade and navigation, and the discoverers of these regions; nor to the Navy, which sacrificed liver and life to protect them. And Chambers of Commerce notwithstanding, we think Lord Granville has done more good than harm in his endeavour to establish some rule of law and order on the Congo.

Much sympathy is expressed in the "Benighted Presidency" for Brigadier-General R. C. Stewart, who has lost his brigade command, and is driven from the service, under the age clause, after 41 years' service. General Stewart had some time to serve, and his retirement therefore means in his case a considerable pecuniary loss.

As announced by us some weeks ago as probable, Colonel R. J. Marter, King's Dragoon Guards, has been given the Brigade command at Agra, which Brigadier-General G. F. Walker vacated on transfer to the command of the Gwalior District on the 10th inst., vice Brigadier-General Massy, whose tenure of command expired on that date. Colonel Sir B. C. Russell, 13th Hussars, will thus be superseded in a Brigade command by his junior, who happens to be qualified in accordance with the recent Pay Code rules, whilst Colonel Baker is not, both officers being Queen's Aides-de-Camp.

Several correspondents have called our attention to the extreme unpunctuality of the London and South-Western Railway in the Volunteer trains. It is an evil we cannot remedy. Even writing to the Times would not do it. Something by way of excuse may be alleged in regard to the inconvenient Waterloo terminus, but we fear there is a radical defect somewhere else. The attempt to combine passenger holiday traffic and military traffic can never succeed. Volunteer traffic does not pay. The critics who censure the railway authorities (vide Observer, &c.,) for their delays may be comforted by the thought that if there were real need for the Volunteers on the coast, the management of the trains would be in the hands of the War Office.

Colonel Warren, from the R.E. Staff at Edinburgh, has been appointed Colonel commanding R.E. at Devonport, vice Colonel Morrison, and is succeeded by Colonel Grant.

In the year ending March 15, 39 Field Officers, 114 Captains, and 409 subalterns—the latter number includes, of course, those transferred to the Line—left the Militia. The exodus of company officers is much to be regretted, and cannot readily be accounted for, seeing the steps taken lately to raise the character of the service.

The total number of men enrolled for the Militia on January 1 last was 99,440, or a falling-off of over 6,000 on the effective strength of the previous year. The total wanting to complete the establishment is 29,875 men. The Territorial system was brought in with the view of increasing the popularity of this important auxiliary.

The Secretary of State has decided that a General officer of the late Indian Artillery or Engineers, who has never volunteered for general service, nor benefited by its rules, but who has furlough at his credit under the Regulations of 1868, on becoming unemployed, is eligible for furlough as if he were a General officer of the Indian Army.

Brevet-Lieutenant-Colonel G. Swinley has been selected for the appointment of Assistant-Adjutant-General of Royal Artillery in the Madras Presidency, vice Colonel H. W. Carne.

Mistakes always happen at reviews, and especially so at the Easter Monday Review. The question of who is to blame is then raised, but is seldom answered satisfactorily. On Easter Monday, for example, the brigade commanded by Colonel Moncrieff was fired into by and fired at its own friends, the Hilsea garrison, sent out under Sir Francis Festing to occupy Cosham and Wymering. Various reasons have been given for the mistake, and some blame has been attached to the Marine officer commanding the advanced guard in Wymering. That officer, however, was not to blame. The fault lay entirely with the Hampshire Yeomanry, who, though belonging to General Monck's army, wore no white brassard on their left arm. Before moving off from the rendezvous at Fort Nelson, the attention of Colonel Crichton was called to the omission by the officer commanding the machine-gun detachment of the Central London Rangers, but there was no time then to procure white arm-bands. The force moved off, and the Yeomanry were ordered on in advance of the machine-guns, which went down the hill and through Porchester at the double, thus getting a long way ahead of the brigade. On the Yeomanry nearing Wymering, the officer in command of the Hilsea troops, observing that the Yeomanry wore no arm-bands, made certain they belonged to General White's invading force, and opened fire accordingly. The Hampshire Yeomanry at first returned the fire, but on observing that the red-coats in front of them wore white arm-bands, they ceased fire and advanced, only to be taken prisoners and detained for some time, the officer in command at Wymering refusing to recognise them as friends until the brigade under Colonel Moncrieff came up and established the fact. Thus the absence of a bit of white tape from the arms of a few troopers nearly proved fatal to General Monck's well-matured plans.

The French War Minister has just issued an order making la boxe obligatory in the Army, more with the idea of keeping men in wind, than to encourage pugilistic encounters.

Major-General Daniell has accepted the Brigade command at Malta, about to be vacated by Major-General Feilding.

It appears that the audacious overture made by the War Office to put Sutherland men into Skye tartans was confined to the Sutherland Volunteers, and that they did not reach the sublime height of proposing to the 93rd to change their tartans, as we were led to believe was the case.

Major-General Sir John Ross comes home from India shortly on six months' leave, Brigadier-General Price will command the Poona Division.

Mr. Stansfeld will on Monday ask the Secretary of State for War whether he proposes to introduce the Government measure for the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts, 1866-69. Unfortunately, these Acts are practically already repealed, as may be seen by the large increase of disease and misery at all our garrison towns.

On November 22, 1883, after the news of Hicks Pasha's defeat was received, the Pall Mall Gazette, in a leader on the catastrophe, wrote :—"We advised the Khedive not to undertake the expedition under Colonel Hicks. The despatch of another army into Kordofan should be imperatively forbidden. Our true policy is so clearly marked out for us that there can hardly be any mistake. It is assumed sometimes that it is a great gain to the cause of civilisation to extend the sovereignty of Egypt over the vast regions of Equatorial Africa. This is not the opinion of those best qualified to judge, nor does it seem natural that the establishment of the authority of the Pasha and the Bashi-Bazouk over a territory as large as India is an end greatly to be desired by the friends of humanity or civilisation." Well, Gordon went up to Khartoum to free the garrisons and to retire, and to effect that object he proclaimed that "slavery was," as the Irishman said, "free" in the Soudan; offered a Sultanate over part of the vast region to the Mahdi, and then, failing in all his attempts at conciliation and what Americans would call "soft sawder," had to come to the ultima ratio regum in Krupps and rifles. Then the Pall Mall Gazette counselled the creation of a Soudan Empire with Gordon as Emperor, and the capital at Khartoum. To-day, the Pall Mall Gazette is clamouring—nay, thundering—for the despatch of an army to Berber first, and Khartoum afterwards, to rescue the Emperor!

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Malta, Saturday, April 19.

The 1st Division, the Minotaur, Sultan, and Neptune, left Phalerum Bay, Athens, on Thursday evening, the 10th, and arrived here, after a fine passage, on Monday morning, the 14th. The 2nd Division, the Agincourt, Northumberland, and Achilles, which had been here since the 4th, left for Syracuse on Monday morning, just before the 1st Division came in. General leave has been given for two days to each watch, and the 1st Division will start to rejoin the others on Monday morning next, the 21st, and the Squadron will proceed to Gibraltar. Malta has been very full during the last week. The Malabar came in on Monday evening with relief crews for the Temeraire and Carysfort, on this station, and the Briton and Ranger on the East Indies; the latter she transferred to the Tyne, and left on Thursday forenoon for England, with the old Temeraires and Caryforts. When she was in there were 14 ships of different sorts in harbour, without counting the Hibernia, or the ships in the Steam Reserve.

Capt. C. C. Rising, who was suspended from the command of the Eclipse in Feb. 1881, has not since been employed. Every day is bringing this officer nearer and nearer to the top of the Captains' List, but as he has still five years' full-pay time to make up before being eligible for promotion to Rear-Admiral, it seems that unless he is ere long employed again, compulsory retirement from nonservice stares him in the face. This officer is one of the youngest captains in the Navy; he has seen much active service, and he has certainly been severely punished for his failings in the Eclipse, so that he may now fairly expect another command. Sir Cooper Key is, however, says the Western Morning News, believed to be adverse to such a step, so that Capt. Rising will possibly have to await the First Sea Lord's departure from Whitehall before having his aspirations in this direction realised.

The Irish Times says:—"The Secretary of State for War has been pleased to allow Col. Mackenzie, half-pay, to hold his present appointment as Commandant of the Royal Military Asylum at Chelsea until he has completed the term of five years in the appointment, which will expire on July 7, 1885.

Whatever may be said upon the relative advantages and disadvantages of the plan which is apparently finding increasing favour with the Admiralty of recommissioning ships abroad on their stations, few will be found to contend, says the Western Morning News, that it is economical or satisfactory in the long run to carry the plan to such extreme limits as to recommission abroad ships urgently requiring extensive repairs. The case of the Invincible on the Mediterranean station is cited as a bad example. When that vessel was commissioned for the Mediterranean, she was not considered capable of doing more than the full term of an ordinary commission, in consequence chiefly of the weak state of her boilers, and it was determined that she should not be kept in commission longer than three years. At the expiration of that period—in March, 1882—to the surprise of everybody on the station, she was recommissioned at Malta, her boilers and machinery then, of course, being considerably the worse for the three years' wear-and-tear. At the same time, an intimation was conveyed by the Admiralty that she would remain on the station only two years. Totally ignoring those circumstances, however, the Admiralty have issued a notification to the ship's company not only that the vessel will complete her full three years' commission, but that in March next a new crew will be sent out to her for a third commission of three years. It is almost unnecessary to add that the state of the vessel scarcely justifies her continuance on a station of such importance as the Mediterranean.

ACTIVE SERVICE cannot wear out the teeth that are brushed night and morning with ROWLAND'S ODONTO, the purest and most fragrant dentifrice ever made. All dentists allow that neither washes nor pastes are as efficacious for polishing the teeth and keeping them sound and white as a pure and non-gritty tooth-powder; such ROWLAND'S ODONTO has always proved itself. Ask any dealer in perfumery for ROWLAND'S ODONTO, and avoid spurious imitations, theirs being the only original and genuine Odonto.

"BRAVO THE GUNNERS!"

"X." writes to us from Bombay, on March 5:—"At the eleventh Central Rifle Meeting, held at Poona, the Lyttelton Annesley Prize, introduced in 1881 by the Adjutant-General of the Bombay Army, was won for the third time by the team belonging to the A Baty. 2nd Brig. R.A. This team, commanded by Serjt.-Major T. Fletcher, far excelled its rivals in the excellent practice it made, its score being composed of centres and bull's-eyes alone,—not a single miss, ricochet, or outer being recorded for them. The actual score made was 152—32 bull's-eyes and 8 centres—out of a possible 160—and the time 9½ min. The competition is similar to the Loyd-Lindsay, the team being composed of four men starting at 900 yards from the target. The jumps were five in number, mud walls, 3 ft. high, and the distances 400 and 200 yards. Target, 2nd-class regulation; bull's-eye, 2 ft.; centre, 4 ft. diametre." "X." asks:—"Is not the above worthy of being placed on record at home, and does it not compare favourably with any score made at home under similar conditions?"

[Certainly, we think so.—ED. A. & N. G.]

"BIS DAT QUI CITO DAT."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In your issue of April 12, you mention that "the Indian medal, with N.W. Frontier clasp, will be granted to the troops under the command of Col. A. Macdonell, C.B., engaged against the Momunds," but you do not mention the date of this service, viz., Dec., 1863, and Jan., 1864, or more than 20 years ago! Rather a difference in this and the time it took to decorate the troops engaged against the Egyptians in 1882. But then the Momunds fought us bravely, and with the light since thrown upon the nature of the foe of 1882, if the rewards and decorations so lavishly bestowed had been delayed, I fancy they would not have been bestowed at all.—I am, &c., UBIQUE.

The members of the Royal Portsmouth Corinthian Yacht Club on Thursday made a presentation to Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, upon the completion of his period of appointment as General Commanding the Southern District. It took the form of a magnificent centre piece, of unique design, value 150 guineas.

Com. Orford Churchill, late of the Urgent, will commission the Wanderer, at Sheerness, in May, for service on the China station.

The Times states that the War Department have just placed a contract with the Birmingham Small-Arms Company for the supply of 3,900 Martini-Henry rifles, to be completed by December.

The London correspondent of the Western Daily Mercury says:—"It is impossible to avoid comment upon the singular difference which has marked the return of the troops from the Soudan Campaign as compared with the return of Sir Garnet Wolseley's army from Alexandria. In the latter case the triumphant circumstance which marked the conclusion of Tel-el-Kebir is sadly lacking in the reception given to the valiant soldiers who carried the British arms from Suakim to Tamai."

Chief Boatswain John Sullivan, V.C., late boatswain of Portsmouth Dockyard, has been granted by the Admiralty the full amount of retirement allowance of his rank.

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks, avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies, are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda water, will be found the least objectionable. ENO'S FRUIT SALT is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the powers of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use ENO'S FRUIT SALT, therefore no family should ever be without it. CAUTION.—Legal Rights are protected in every Civilised Country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. Directions, in Sixteen Languages, how to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at ENO'S Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. ENO'S Patent.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS, Etc.

INVICTA.—The picquet had no legal authority to arrest the men; à fortiori, none to put them in the guard-room. They shou'd have called in the police. All citizens have a right to assist in preventing breaches of the peace.

"STAFF CORPS AND INDIAN ARMY FUND."—The circular was sent to the daily papers. We cannot undertake to print circulars.

AUXILIARY.—One lives and learns many strange things, but we cannot set the "largest circu'ation in the world" in order. Certainly no Yeomanry regiment "saw active service in France in 1814."

Many interesting communications are unavoidably omitted for want of space.

According to a recent Admiralty Order, potash caustic will in future be issued for cleaning the sides of those of her Majesty's ships which are painted a light colour, in lieu of hard soap in proportion. This will be welcome news to those who have hitherto had the difficult task of keeping a clean appearance on the light-painted vessels.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

THIS Company is formed for the purpose of taking over, continuing, and extending the business of Army contractor, general uniform manufacturer, and equipment furnisher, established and successfully carried on by Mr. Richard Stanway, at the Enderley Mills, Newcastle-under-Lyme, Staffordshire, and for acquiring the freehold mills with their machinery and plant, as a going concern.

The machinery and arrangements are of an unique and most modern character, and especially designed for the work and the new system of manufacture which Mr. Stanway has introduced. This system has the reputation of greatly increasing the facility of production, and materially reduces the cost of manufacture. A description of this system and of the mills appeared in the Standard of Tuesday, November 16 last, headed "A Model Factory."

Mr. Stanway has, without the aid of travellers, representatives, or agents, made the business one of the largest of the kind in the United Kingdom.

The magnitude of the demand for uniforms is shown by the orders now on the books for the British Army, the Volunteer and Police forces, the leading railways, &c., and the great demand for the Colonies, India, and foreign countries, as well as for the Governments of Europe.

Mr. Stanway has agreed to become managing director of the Company, thus insuring a continuance of the present efficient and successful management. Mr. Stanway accepts a salary of £1,000 per annum, and a commission of 5 per cent. upon the dividends from time to time declared.

The consideration to be paid to the vendor is as follows:—£20,000 in cash for the freehold mills and premises, plant, and machinery, which sum is based upon the valuation of Messrs. Fuller, Horsey, and Co., by whom the property was valued in June, 1883, at £19,285, since which date additions have been made thereto; and (in fully paid-up shares not to exceed £15,000) 10 per cent. on the capital subscribed or money borrowed.

The stock at the time the Company take over the business is to be taken at a valuation, to be made in the usual course.

The present issue of Shares will suffice not only for the cash payments to be made for the business, but also for the provision of an ample working capital.

The high reputation of the business, its increasing prosperity, and the augmentation of profits to be obtained by its extension, justify the confident expectation that highly satisfactory results will be realised by the Company, and the result of contracts executed warrants the conviction that large dividends will be obtained.

The following contracts have been entered into, viz., a contract made April 17, 1884, between Richard Stanway of the one part, and T. D. C. Parker, on behalf of the Company, of the other part; and an agreement by letters dated respectively January 15, February 21, and April 16, 1884, between Richard Stanway and the Joint-Stock Association (Limited). In addition there are many current contracts entered into by Mr. Stanway with her Majesty's Government, railway companies, and other public bodies, for the supply of uniforms, materials, &c. Applicants for Shares are to be deemed to have waived the publication of the particulars of these last-named contracts.

Copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association, and of the two Agreements above specified, can be seen at the Offices of the Solicitors of the Company.

In the event of no Allotment being made, the Application money will be returned in full.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application for Shares may be obtained from the National Provincial Bank of England (Limited), Bishopsgate Street, London, E.C., or any of its Branches, and at the Offices of the Company, 72 King William Street, London, E.C., and at the Enderley Mills, Newcastle-under-Lyme, Staffordshire.

April 21, 1884.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS. — NERVOUS DEBILITY.—No part of the human machine requires more watching than the nervous system,—upon it hangs health and life itself. These Pills are the best regulators and strengtheners of the nerves, and the safest general purifiers. Nausea, headache, giddiness, numbness, and mental apathy yield to them. They dispatch in a summary manner those distressing dyspeptic symptoms, stomachic pains, fulness at the pit of the stomach, abdominal distension, and overcome both capricious appetite and confined bowels — the commonly accompanying signs of defective or deranged nervous powers. Holloway's Pills are particularly recommended to persons of studious and sedentary habits, who gradually sink into a nervous and debilitated state, unless some such restorative be occasionally taken.

CO-OPERATION. — COOPER COOPER and CO. also invite attention to the new System of Co-operation in the purchase of Tea by persons living in the country through the medium of the Parcels Post.

CO-OPERATION.—Thus, as COOPER COOPER and CO. are enabled to send packages containing 6 lb. of any of the Choice TEAS on their List to any place in the United Kingdom for 3d, it follows that if six families in a village are willing to club together, each can have a pound of tea sent for one halfpenny.

CO-OPERATION.—Or, as two parcels containing 6 lb. each can be sent for 6d, six families would be enabled, by joining together in one remittance, to order 2 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA each, at a cost of one penny only, in addition to the price of the tea.

CO-OPERATION.—This system will apply to every kind of TEA offered for Sale by COOPER COOPER and CO., and if followed out will practically enable them to place before customers in every county town and village in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, in the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man, in the Hebrides, and the Orkneys, Tea of the same choice kinds as sold in their various Establishments in London, at the same prices, with the addition of the nominal sum of one halfpenny a pound.

ARMY ORGANISATION.

"Army Organisation!" The words stink in our nostrils! There is an effluvium of decayed Commissions, a sickening aroma of rotten Reports about them! But the Quarterly Review has brought a little sweetness and light to bear on the corpus vile of "Army Organisation," and we are very thankful for the wholesome influence which an organ of such authority ought to exercise in a controversy the issues of which may be the life or death of an Empire, being directed to the critical examination of the effects of recent changes in our military forces. Setting out with the question of the re-creation of a local European Army for India, the Quarterly Reviewer brushes aside like flies the arguments against the establishment of 40,000 British troops, commanded by European officers, for Indian service; but does not go so far as to assert the re-creation of a local European Army is necessary or inevitable. He alludes, also, to the proposal that, instead of a local army for India, there might be certain regiments with foreign service limited to India and the adjacent islands, into which recruits engaging for 12 years should be enlisted at higher rates of pay, on the understanding that in event of war their services should be at the free disposal of Government. The Reviewer considers, however, that the idea is open to grave objections, and that if a special army for India be formed at all, it must be on the lines of the old Company's forces. But even with that local European Army, there would, he thinks, be no escape from our present chaos. Nothing short of a radical change in the whole Home Army, and especially of the Infantry, will do that! The double battalion system, resting on a common depôt, has broken down. We shall let the reviewer speak for himself:—

"The distribution of battalions into eight companies offers no advantages over the old distribution into ten. It has proved, on the contrary, less elastic, and therefore less suited to the conditions of battalions so peculiarly circumstanced as ours. So also the accumulation of field officers, though perhaps necessary as a counterpoise to the abolition of purchase, is at once a cumbersome and an expensive scheme; and even the reserved pay, for which so much can be said in theory, seems in practice to operate disadvantageously to the public service. In a word, the machine, in spite of all that is said to the contrary in Parliament, in after-dinner speeches, and in the press, is thoroughly out of gear, and will soon become practically useless, unless steps be taken at once, and in earnest, to avert the calamity. Where are we to turn for a competent adviser in such a strait, and a model on which to construct our improvements? We regret to say that it has become the fashion, in quarters where we should little expect to find it, to speak slightingly of the administrative abilities of the most perfect military administrator this country ever produced. Venture to quote the opinion of the great Duke of Wellington on any subject connected with the Army, and you are met with the assurance that his authority goes for nothing; that, clear as his judgment may have been for the age in which he lived, both his opinions and his practices are out of date. Such a revolution has taken place within the last twenty years in all military matters, in the size of armies, in their composition, in their armament, and so forth, that we might as well look into Cæsar's Commentaries for instruction in the art of war, as follow the course pursued by the Duke in the organisation of a modern army. Now, apologizing humbly for the use of so unmannerly an expression, we are constrained to say that this is sheer nonsense. It is, moreover, uncandid nonsense. The Duke's system of organisation had no necessary connection either with the size of armies or the weapons which they carry. It touched only the order in which troops, whether few or many, should be told off in an Empire circumstanced as no other is on the earth's surface. Neither is it affected one way or another by the conditions of long or short service. The Duke preferred long service, and made no secret of his regret in partially parting with it. But the campaigns of Sadowa and Sedan had not been fought when he consented to exchange 21 for 12 years' service; and long before the policy of creating a paid reserve suggested itself he had passed away. It is not, therefore, in dealing with this part of our subject that we turn for instruction to his views. What alone we are called upon to examine is, the arrangements he made for furnishing the country, at the least possible expense, with an army adequate to the demands that were likely to be made upon it then, and to consider how far, if adopted now, they might be found equal to the requirements of the present time. For, open as we feel ourselves to be to the charge of old-fogeyism, we confess to the weakness of considering the Duke of Wellington and his system to be the only safe guides which it becomes any English Army reformer to follow."

And again, in the way of retrospect, the Quarterly remarks:—

"With but one short interval between 1793 and 1815 England, we must remember, was carrying on war in every quarter of the globe. She had armies in the field on the Continent of Europe, in India, in America, and in Africa, all of them more or less numerous, and all equally fed from home. The infantry regiments which took part in these wars were represented in the field, if consisting of two battalions, by one of these; if of three, by two battalions; if of more, as was the case with the 60th, we cannot say exactly by how many, because the 60th was made up largely of foreigners, and recruited principally from among our prisoners of war. We had besides these in our service corps avowedly foreign, such as the German Legion, the Brunswickers, the Chasseurs Britanniques, and others, of which it is unnecessary to say anything, because, though very good troops, especially the German Legion and the Brunswickers, they managed their internal affairs, as well as their recruiting, each on its own system. It followed as a necessary result from this organisation that the second battalions, or those left at home, were made up almost entirely of very old or very young soldiers. All men, as soon as they became matured and had mastered their drill, were sent off in drafts to the battalions abroad, leaving their places to be filled up with recruits and volunteers from the militia. The single-battalion regiments, on the other hand, depended for being kept complete upon an eleventh company, created for depôt purposes, and liable to be suppressed on the return of the regiment from foreign service. Had the defence of the realm from invasion depended in those day son its Home Army, our condition would have been even more unsatisfactory than it is now. This was not, however, the case. Behind the Regular Forces stood a Militia, numerous, well-trained, and constantly under arms. Next came Pitt's Army of Reserve, represented by 13 garrison battalions; after them, 14 veteran battalions, none of them so completely worn out as to be unfit for garrison duty; and, last of all, a local Militia, the successors of the volunteers, stout men, to be counted by tens of thousands, but without much discipline, because rarely embodied, and only for short intervals. But above all and before all, we had a Navy, which had so entirely estalished its supremacy that, during the last three years of the great French war, no enemy's craft would venture out to sea, except at the risk of being sunk or captured. Whether our Navy of the present day is equally to be relied on, is for the Government to determine. If it be not, we may find ourselves, when we least expect it, more dependent for the defence of London upon the native valour of our Volunteers and Militia than on the steady discipline of our regular Army."

Severe as is the strain on our infantry in 1884, it was more severe in 1839:—

"We have now on foot 141 battalions; we had then only 103. With 50 battalions in India, and 20 scattered through the Colonies and foreign garrisons, we ought to have 71 at home. At the period to which the Duke's letter refers we had 80 battalions abroad and only 23 at home. But the difference between our position now and then is, that now our Home battalions are of unequal strength, and all depleted by the necessity of feeding those which are abroad, whereas our 23 battalions in 1839 were of a uniform strength, and composed entirely of trained men. Behind them, moreover, stood 56 depôts, each a compact though small body, fully officered, carefully trained, and admirably adapted for the occupation of the many minor but not unimportant military posts with which Great Britain, and still more Ireland, abounds. But this is not all. In process of time the strength of the service companies was raised to 600 rank and file, while the depôts, which when first thrown off mustered 220 respectively, grew larger from day to day till many of them reached 300, and some even more. We thus find that in 1852, after providing for all our foreign possessions, in which, be it remembered, were included Canada, Australia, and the Ionian Islands, we had disposable at home 38 mature battalions, of which 34 were on an establishment of 850, and the four others, making up among them our only two-battalion regiments, two of 660, and two of 600. If we bring these items into one sum, we shall see that the trustworthy force of infantry at that time, in England, Scotland, Ireland, and the Channel Islands, amounted to 29,260, backed up by 7,520 younger soldiers, all of them under careful training, many quite fit to take their places in the ranks. Can we make such a boast now, or anything like it? Nor is this all that can be said for these diminutive military bodies. There was not one among them but was capable of rapid expansion whenever the occasion arose. Should one of the little wars have broken out to which we always have been and always must be liable, and five or six or even ten infantry regiments been ordered abroad, their places at home could soon have been filled by the simple and inexpensive process of adding 150 or 200 recruits to each depôt. If a great European war impended, then every depôt could in a short time have been converted into a second battalion, and a supplementary army thus raised to support that already under arms."

The Duke of Wellington's cares as to the Indian Army were limited to the enforcement of the principle that the five Cavalry regiments should be kept up to 600 sabres, and the twenty-four battalions of infantry to 1,000 bayonets; but in dealing with the Home Army, he allowed the considerations of economy to carry him too far, particularly as regarded Cavalry and Artillery, because he looked on peace as assured and certain to last. The contrast between the Duke's time, when the Commander-in-Chief was a real power in the State, and the Master-General of the Ordnance presided over the Board for Matériel, and the present blessed system, is drawn with a firm hand:—

"Now there is not a detail so minute, be it the shape of a soldier's knapsack or the head-dress he is to wear, but must be submitted to the consideration of the War Minister, and by him determined. Yea, and there is one other and perhaps more serious inconvenience attendant on the arrangement. Ever since a special Secretary of State became, under the Crown, the visible head of the Army, there has been at work a chronic antagonism between the War Office and the Horse Guards, which, however it may be concealed from the general public, is perfectly well known to all men connected with the Army. Hence the constant appeals for advice to Commissioners and Committees, of which one not unfrequently contradicts another, and from the recommendations of which the dullest intellect is at no loss to ascertain to which of the rival authorities the reporting body desires to give its support. Why this should be, it is impossible to understand. When England, in imitation of foreign nations, was bamboozled into demanding a War Minister, per se, why did the Government stop short of appointing some great soldier to the office? Observe that we do not say that such an arrangement would have been preferable to that under which our greatest military exploits were achieved. Far from it. But surely it would have given better promise of fair treatment, both to the soldier and the taxpayer, than they have hitherto received, or are likely to receive, from whatever chance civilian happens to be pitchforked into Pall Mall. Oh, but, we shall be told, such a proceeding would have been quite unconstitutional. Unconstitutional! Why so? Constitutional Belgium, equally with autocratic Russia, democratic France, the Federation of Switzerland, and the United States of America, all entrust the Portfolio of War to a General Officer, who goes out of office when his party goes, and is succeeded by another General, of perhaps a different shade of politics, but quite as determined as he to do his duty both by the country and the Army."

The argument of the collapse of the Duke's system, which we have so often heard adduced, is thus met:—

"The point, therefore, at which we are aiming is, that for a British Army the Duke's system, so modified as to meet the requirements of the present time, is not only the best, but the only system on which it is possible to act with any assured prospect of success. And do not let this statement be met by replying that the Duke's system broke down as soon as it was fairly tried; it did nothing of the sort. A weak Government drifted into a war, on the possible occurrence of which they never allowed themselves to count, and against which to the last moment they refused to prepare. The consequence was that when the war came, and they found themselves pledged to put five-and-twenty thousand men in the field, they could do so only by destroying the entire Army through the hideous process of breaking up depôts and calling for volunteers from one battalion into another. Had the Militia been embodied in time, and the word passed to depôts to recruit, we might have had an ample reserve in hand before the first shot was fired, to fill up vacancies as they occurred in the Crimea. Because this was not done, that collapse in our military strength took place against which it was the object of the Duke's system to provide."

As to the expense between the old system and the new, the Quarterly remarks:—

"The estimated strength of the Regular Army for 1883-4 appears to have been, independently of the corps employed in India, 134,793; of these 12,424 are Cavalry inclusive of the Household Corps; 2,777 are Horse Artillery, 18,807 Field and Garrison Artillery, and 80,710 Infantry. The residue, amounting to 7,152, is made up partly of Colonial, partly of Departmental Corps. The strength of the Army, after providing for the Indian Contingent, was, in 1882, 116,816. Of these 8,493 were Cavalry, 13,721 Artillery, 2,361 Engineers, and 92,743 Infantry. The remainder consisted of West Indian regiments and Colonial corps, numbering in all 8,967. The disparity in numbers between these two armies is not very great, unless we include in our present Army Militia and Volunteers, on which, however, though they add enormously to our purely defensive force, the expenditure is comparatively inconsiderable. The difference in the estimates voted for the maintenance of each is startling. In 1852 the Army cost England a trifle less than nine millions sterling. In 1884 the House of Commons has handed over to the Secretary of State for War something over sixteen millions sterling. It thus appears that, whilst England and India (still under the Company's rule) between them contributed rather more than nineteen millions for the defence of the State, the united contributions of these two portions of the Empire amount now to a trifle under thirty-two millions."

The inference from the premises we leave to the judgment of our readers. It is this:—

> "Were the Army a really effective Army, effective, that is, say in all its parts, in the physique and training of the men, in the appliances required for putting a single Army Corps in the field, the House of Commons would stand in no need of apology for voting the large sum of £16,000,000 and upwards for its maintenance. But when we bear in mind Lord Hartington's frank confession that the Home Army is a young Army, when we further know that for lack of appliances it could not be promptly mobilised, the comparison of the article with the price paid for it is far from making us contented with our bargain. Nor will it avail to cast in our teeth the exploits of the troops that fought in Egypt and the Soudan. The Army which won the battle of Tel-el-Kebir was composed to a large extent of men drawn from the Reserve to take the places of some thousands whom, because of their extreme youth, the regiments left behind; and in Sir Gerald Graham's force the number of immature soldiers is exceedingly small. But supposing the necessity should arise of reinforcing the Army of Egypt, where are the reinforcements to come from? You cannot for such a purpose call upon the Reserve again, and must, therefore, apply either to India or to our Mediterranean garrisons, where, up to the other day, only seasoned soldiers were quartered, but whose places must in this case be filled by regiments composed of such materials as Mr. Tottenham, in a recent speech in the House of Commons, so fitly described. Surely this is not a state of things to which the country ought to submit, merely because in changing it statesmen on both sides may be forced to acknowledge that they proved themselves unequal to the task which a mistaken public opinion constrained them to undertake."

But apparently the country will submit, and what is more, is quite delighted with what it has got for its money.

HEREDITARY HONOURS FOR THE NAVY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In your issue of last Saturday, the 19th inst., in commenting on my introduction in the Royal Navy List for April of the names of the famous battles in which the ships of the Royal Navy have been engaged, you say that I cannot claim originality for the idea, as an article appeared in your paper some years since advocating the same thing, and that you "do not suppose that Col. Lean intentionally adopted the suggestions of another without acknowledgment." As this reads very much like an "inference" that I had read the article you referred to, I hope you will give me the opportunity of publicly denying the fact. I have no doubt that the idea has entered the minds of many, but I must beg to assure you that, with regard to myself, it was original, and that I have not seen your article of Jan. 8, 1881. At all events, I am the first who has adopted the idea, and made it an established fact. Having done so much, I claim your advocacy of my work, and the help of your columns to bring the subject prominently before public notice, so that the honours that are so deservedly granted to the Army may, by her gracious Majesty's approval, be also awarded to her Navy. As the record now stands in the Royal Navy List, it is only an interesting addition to a book that you have been kind enough to describe as, "There is no such work of the same kind published of so exhaustive a character for any other profession." The regiments of the Army are permitted for all time to wear on their colours and accoutrements, and have appended to their numbers in the Army List, the names of the victories in which they have taken part; but there is no such official record of the famous battle-ships of the Royal Navy. The names of ships have been handed down from the days of the Armada, as I find the Victory, Revenge, and Triumph were the three flagships in that memorable fight, and are still represented. It appears that the name of the ship should be as good as the name of the regiment. In either case, there is nothing in existence that was in the battle 100 years ago except the name. Officers and men, uniform, arms, accoutrements of regiments, all changed and new. The Army rightly claim the name as a heritage. Why not the Navy? And if so, why should it not, in the case of the Navy, be officially recognised, and those victories that may be deemed fitting emblazoned on the ship herself, and entered against her name in the Admiralty Navy List?—I am, &c.,

FRANCIS LEAN, Editor Royal Navy List.

The Portsmouth Times hears that arrangements are being made by the War Office for the erection in the whole of the barracks in the Southern District of shooting galleries for use with Morris's aiming apparatus. The galleries, coming under the heading of recreation rather than drill, are to be constructed near the canteens. The pattern of gallery approved is similar to one which has been erected in Beggar's Bush Barracks, Dublin, and has now been in use for some months.

Reviews.

The Edinburgh Review. (Longmans and Co.)

If any of our readers remembers enough of his school-boy days—or college, if he had any—and cherishes kindly recollections, which is not, we fear, probable, of the memory of Herodotus, he may be recommended to the present number of the Edinburgh Review for as trenchant and merciless a criticism of a pert professor's edition of the first three books of the work of the Father of History as Jeffrey would have applied to his hide, had Jeffrey known Greek enough. Professor Sayce deserves no mercy. He attacked a dead lion, but a terrible Grecian has come out upon him, and given him such a dressing as Mr. Tyas, of the Times, prepared for Lord Brougham in his now-forgotten criticism of his lordship's "Demosthenes." After a very comforting perusal of the review, we believe our readers who are interested in the matter will agree with us that the concluding sentence is an excellent summing-up:—"Mr. Sayce has edited three books of an ancient writer, whose reputation he was bent on destroying. The reputation which has suffered is not that of Herodotus." There is an article on "Egypt," which appears to be written with some knowledge of the situation, of which the most interesting service proposition is that the presence of 8,000 or 10,000 British troops must for some time be regarded as necessary; and that there must consequently be an increase to the numbers of the Army in general, and an addition to the £16,000,000 already paid for our establishment. Green's last work (which was the "Song of the Swan," indeed), "The Conquest of England," is treated in a kindly spirit, inspired by the community of cultus of reviewer and historian, for each of whom the English race, treated as a separate species, is the object of adoration, though the reviewer remarks that "interbreeding, which has proved so valuable and productive of the finest flocks and herds, has operated in a larger and less visible way, because for a much longer time in the composite race formed out of the many races who now occupy Great Britain." Mr. Green's English were Schleswig-Holsteiners and so-called Saxons, and it is scarcely possible—it certainly is not probable—that the Danes who settled on the lands, from which they were only ousted by the Saxon, they had conquered after long and sanguinary struggles, did not leave a large impression of their blood in the race. Nothing more cruel and ferocious is recorded in history than the doings of the original Saxon invaders in their devastations of Britain, and the way in which they treated inferior races may have transmitted its influence to our modes of action, modified by circumstances, when we are "clearing" a new-found land for civilised settlement.

SOME MAGAZINES FOR MAY.

The May number of Cornhill is well deserving of attention. It opens with extracts from the "Journal" kept by the last European who rode through the desert from Berber to Suakim. This was Col. Colborne, on Hicks's Staff. All the doctors had declared him to be dying, and informed Gen. Hicks that unless he quitted the Soudan he should be a dead man in three weeks. One of the most amusing circumstances that occurred was the meeting between Col. Colborne and "O'Donovan." It is thus described:—"Whilst lying on the deck of my dahabeeah, exhausted by the heat and enfeebled by dysentery, I observed the singular figure of a man watching me from the bank. He was clad in a loose caftan, and wore a tarboosh, swathed in the ample folds of a silken koufieh, the picturesque scarf worn by the Arabs as a protection against the burning rays of the sun; his girdle was furnished with dagger and pistol, and his nether man was encased in boots and breeches. His face was tanned, and 'he was bearded like the pard.'" The wearer of this incongruous costume was O'Donovan, the adventurous war correspondent of the Daily News, whose name has recently come before the public in connection with his plucky and desperate ride to Merv, in Central Asia. It appears that the last time these two had met was on a memorable occasion. It was at Constantinople, and O'Donovan was in durance vile in the prison of Galata Serai, at Pera, whither he had been consigned on a charge of having insulted the Sultan; he had an instinctive love of dangerous adventures. Little did Col. Colborne think they should not meet again when he bade him "God speed" the next day on his way to Khartoum. "The Giant's Robe" is not yet concluded; on the contrary, it appears as if the story was to acquire new strength, and was about to introduce new characters and narrate new incidents. The present number is not an interesting one, possibly because "Dolly" is ignored in it altogether; however, the story is one in which it becomes very difficult to create any exceptional interest. There are some other contributions in the May number of Cornhill which add to its interest.

The eighth number of the English Illustrated Magazine contains a great deal of readable matter, and is illustrated by some high-class engravings. Among others will be found a story by Thomas Hardy, called "The Interlopers at the Knap." "The Armourer's 'Prentices" is also continued.

Longman for May is quite up to the average, although it would be difficult to point out any particularly good feature in it, unless, indeed, it is "My Paris Masters," by the author of "Reata." Mrs. Oliphant's "Madam" and "Jack's Courtship" are continued, while French and English towns are carefully considered by Mr. E. A. Freeman. This number of Longman, taken altogether, shows what good value is to be had for sixpence.

EGYPTIAN NOTES.

"His Excellency Gen. Sartorius Pasha," says the Egyptian Gazette of April 12, "left Cairo this morning for Suez, where he will embark on board the outward bound Clan Line steamer for Bombay, where he will resume his appointment as second-in-command of the Bombay Marine Battalion."

Capt. Molyneux, and Lieuts. Poore and Pigott, R.N., returned from Upper Egypt on April 22.

Brig.-Surg. M'Dowell, P.M.O. of the Suakim Expeditionary Force, has resumed his appointment as Sanitary Officer of the Cairo District.

H.E. Coetlogon Pasha has been appointed an Inspector of Police in Upper Egypt, and has proceeded to Assiout.

Lieut. Kennedy, of the 1st Royal Highlanders, who has accompanied Rear-Admiral Hewett to Abyssinia, in charge of transport, has been granted the status of Deputy-Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. whilst employed with the mission.

Lieut.-Col. Quirk, of the Egyptian Army, has been directed to report himself for duty at the Egyptian Army Head-quarters.

Major Hare has been appointed acting commandant of the 1st Batn. of the Egyptian Army, from the 1st inst.

Major Tapp, 1st Batn., Major Lloyd, 4th Batn., Major Hunter, 9th Batn., have been appointed second-in-command.

Lieut. Riddell, of the 3rd Batn. King's Royal Rifle Corps, and Lieut. Stewart, of the 1st Batn. Gordon Highlanders, who had been serving on probation in the Egyptian Army, have been permitted to rejoin their regiments in the English Army at their own request.

Major Smith-Dorrien has been granted leave of absence on medical certificate from the 3rd to the 23rd inst.

El-Kaman states that the widow of every Egyptian soldier killed in the Soudan has been paid the sum of P.T. 500 by the Government. This is a breach of custom and contract which will be attributed to the English, and do them much injury. The widows were entitled to the full pay of the soldiers for life. Instead of that, they get £5 each.

Mr. Bennett, Army Veterinary Department, has returned to Alexandria from special duty in the Egyptian Sanitary Department.

H.M.S. Express will probably be stationed at Port Said.

On April 12, the total strength of the detachment of the Egyptian Army garrisoning Suakim was seven English officers, 27 native officers, four English non-commissioned officers, and 812 native non-commissioned officers and men.

Com. Donner, R.N., Principal Transport Officer in Egypt, accompanied by Mr. Carlisle, R.N., on completion of his duties, in connection with the expedition to Suakim, returned to Alexandria.

Assist.-Comy.-Gen. of Ordnance Mills has arrived at Alexandria from the Soudan, and was heartily welcomed by his numerous friends in town, who were glad to see him in such excellent health after the hard work he had so efficiently performed during the recent campaign."—Egyptian Gazette.

Deputy-Assist.-Comy.-Gen. of Ordnance Houghton arrived at Alexandria from the Soudan.

Assist-Comy.-Gen. Nugent has been posted to Alexandria for duty on his return from the Soudan.

Deputy-Assist.-Commissaries-Gen. Wilson Rainsford, Hamilton, Jessop, and Rogers have been posted to the Capital from the Soudan.

Lord John Hay will not like to hear it, but he has been engaged in manufacture, we are told, and has been "making himself" very popular. Thus we read how lately:—"Vice-Admiral Lord John Hay went for a trip to Maraboot on board H.M.S. Helicon, Major-Gen. Earle being among the Admiral's guests on the occasion"; and how much pleased they all were. The accounts from the Squadron are very cheerful.

FROM THE THAMES TO THE CASPIAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In your issue of the 12th inst. you call attention to a statement, which you quote as having been recently published, to the effect that it "may be a new geographical fact for some Englishmen to know that if they were to set out in a steamer 250 ft. long from London Bridge, they could go with that steamer all the way to the Caspian Sea, the through voyage being accomplished by means of the magnificent canal system joining the Neva with the Caspian, thanks to which Russia could dispatch any number of transports from the Baltic to the Caspian. A fresh illustration of this fact is likely to be witnessed before long in the dispatch of a number of steamers from the Black Sea to the Caspian, viâ the Mediterranean, Baltic, and Volga," &c. This can hardly be said to be a new geographical fact for any one, inasmuch as it is not a fact at all. The following are the officially published dimensions of vessels which are permitted to pass through the system of canals joining the Neva with the Volga and the Caspian Sea:—Length, up to 147 ft.; width, 27½ ft.; and draught, 4 ft. 4½ in. These restrictions are necessary on account of the limited size of the numerous locks and the shallowness of the water, &c. Hence, it is obvious that no steamer of anything like 250 ft. could possibly pass through by this canal system from the Neva to the Volga, and thence to the Caspian. It is equally obvious that the passage of any sea-going vessels, such as transports from the Baltic, or steamers of the Black Sea Steam Navigation Company is out of the question. The Volga Steam Navigation Company, when they send any new vessels to the Volga, are obliged to have them constructed so as to take into two or three pieces, and with only 4 ft. draught, in order to get them through by this route at all, and even then they often have great difficulty in effecting their passage to Rybinsk, where this canal system strikes the Volga.—I am, &c.,

F. C. T.

P.S.—Even if sea-going steamers could get through from the Neva to the Volga, there are several valid reasons why they could hardly ever get to the Caspian. With these, however, I will not trouble you.

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

The companies which will commence their training on the 1st prox. were put through a short course of field-work during the week, under the supervision of the Royal Engineers.

One squadron of each Cavalry regiment is now struck off all other duty for military training.

The 1st Battalion, Coldstream Guards, will proceed to Pirbright for musketry practice. Last year it was found necessary to statton a special force of Military Mounted Police in the vicinity of the encampment.

The 1st Battalion, Scots Guards, have brought with them about 200 recruits. They seem a little superior, as regards physique, to the ordinary recruits sent here from the depôts to regiments of the Line. It is a happy thought of the authorities to hide them at Aldershot for a few months, until they grow a little. A Guardsman who barely turns the scale at 11 st. 5 lb. in full marching order, rifle and ammunition included, is something new, even in these wonderful times. Such a specimen of the British Grenadier is said to be here at the present time, wearing the uniform of the Scots Guards.

The Divisional Spring Steeplechase Meeting will take place on Friday and Saturday next, on the North Horns course. The entries this year are good, the largest number being for the Cavalry Chargers' Steeplechase, the principal event of the meeting. The prize is a piece of plate, value 100 sovereigns, the gift of Sir F. FitzWygram.

Major Railston and Lieutenants Nason and Macan, 26th Cameronians; Captains Downing and Maynard, R.A., and Penno, 69th; Lieutenants the Hon. A. Fortescue, Gosselin, and Lovell, 2nd Battalion, Coldstream Guards; Gilpin, 82nd; Gore, 107th; Bunny, 66th; Thackwell and Crofts, 37th; Dorling, 105th; and Reade, 85th, have been ordered to report themselves on Thursday next to Major Harvey, Garrison Instructor, for a course of garrison instruction.

The detachment of Royal Irish Fusiliers was moved to Portsmouth yesterday to join the 89th. It numbers about 320.

The 15th Hussars Regimental Steeplechase Meeting will take place on the Racecourse between the two Camps on May 8.

Captain Gordon-Mackenzie, 2nd Dragoon Guards; Lieutenants Wingfield, 7th Hussars; Browne, 15th Hussars; Milligan and Holland, 1st Battalion, Coldstream Guards; Hotham, 26th Cameronians; Pigott, 3rd Battalion, Rifle Brigade; and Silver, Royal Highlanders, proceeded to the School of Musketry on Tuesday last.

Colonel A. H. W. Williams, commanding Royal Artillery, has gone to Shoeburyness.

The annual return of the cavalry and artillery horses serving in the United Kingdom during the year 1883, prepared by Mr. Fleming, the Principal Veterinary-Surgeon, has just been issued from the War Office. It shows the average strength to have been 11,921; the admissions into the infirmary were in the proportion of 782 per 1,000, the deaths 14·68, destroyed 10·57, or together 25·25 per 1,000, and the cast exclusive of those sold on account of reduction of establishment, 95·38 per 1,000. These results compare favourably as regards the mortality with those of the two preceding years, the only ones which have been published, but the admissions show an increase; the number cast in each period is nearly the same. On the average of these two years the admissions were 687 per 1,000, the deaths 25·28, destroyed 9·39, or together 34·67, and the cast 94·83 per 1,000. The high ratio of deaths in these two years was due to general diseases, chiefly anæmia and asthenia, and to those of the respiratory apparatus in 1882. In 1883 the deaths from glanders and farcy amounted to 17, being nearly double those from the same cause in the preceding years. Nine of the cases occurred at Aldershot, where the disease was introduced by an officer's charger which became infected at Alresford; six more at Chatham, where they contracted it from an officer's charger which became infected in Egypt. One case of farcy occurred at Leeds, and the other at York. The most prevalent disease among the horses during the year was catarrh, but the class which gave rise to the largest number of admissions was that of the locomotory apparatus, chiefly sprains, contusions, punctures, and exostosis (splint). The most fatal diseases were those of the respiratory apparatus, and next to them of the locomotory; almost all of the mortality by the latter appears under the head of "destroyed." The most frequent cause of casting was "old age." Out of a total of 1,137 cast there were 737 accounted for under this head, whose average length of service was twelve years and a half. Laminitis, laryngismus, travicular disease, sprains, and anæmia are among the more frequent causes of casting. It is satisfactory to find that ophthalmia does not appear as the cause in a single instance; indeed, the prevalence of disease of the eye is remarkably small in the service, only 102 admissions having occurred in the whole force during the course of the year. A table of the admissions and mortality by ages shows the greatest amount of cases to occur among horses of four years of age, probably from the number brought into the service at that age, in whom disease arises from the change of diet and treatment. The sickness appears to decrease till the age of 11 or 12, when it again rises, but not to such an extent as at four years. The mortality also is highest at the same age, and does not rise so high again till 16; but the numbers are still too small to justify any positive deductions from them, or to furnish a reliable average.—Lancet.

Lieut. Cotter, R.M.L.I., Plymouth Division, has proceeded to Hythe, to undergo a course of instruction at the School of Musketry.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE.

We are authorised to state that an examination for cadetships at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, will take place at the University of London on July 1 and following days. The medical examination of the candidates will take place on the previous day at 109 Victoria Street, Westminster; the subjects of examination, the limits of age, and other conditions will be those specified in the regulations issued with G. O. 113 of 1880. There will be 122 cadetships to be awarded, of which 100 will be for infantry, 15 for cavalry, and seven for West Indian regiments. Intending competitors must inform the Military Secretary before the date fixed for examination whether they elect to be considered candidates for cavalry or infantry. If within the prescribed limits of age, they may return their names (1) for both infantry and cavalry, expressing a preference for one or the other; (2) for infantry only; or (3) for cavalry only. Cadetships will be given to successful candidates, subject to the above limitation of numbers, in order of merit, in accordance with the election they have made. In the case of (1)—viz., those who have returned their names for both infantry and cavalry—they will be taken for infantry or cavalry in accordance with the preference expressed by them. The number of cadetships to be awarded in each arm will not be exceeded, and candidates must distinctly understand that the election made by them before the examination will be absolutely final, and that it cannot be altered after the result of the examination has been declared. Twelve cadetships, in addition to the above, will also be offered for competition by university candidates, as provided for in the regulations. The successful competitors will be required to join the Royal Military College as gentlemen cadets on Sept. 2 next. Applications cannot be received unless made in strict accordance with the regulations, May 15 next being the latest date on which applications can be received.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Will you allow me, as one of those who are concerned in the preparation of gentlemen for the Army, to make a few short comments on the proposed alterations in the subjects to be taken up by candidates for admission to the Royal Military College at Sandhurst? With the general scope of the intended changes I find no fault. They are, to a great extent, those which have been advocated by me for some years past. I have always believed that it was a mistake to mark the Sciences too highly, as it is rarely possible for a lad to attain proficiency in them; and should he possess exceptional abilities in a scientific direction, the proportion of marks now proposed is sufficient to enable him to obtain a very good score in them. I also cordially agree to the relative superiority given to Latin, mathematics, French, and German. But I venture to think, on the other hand, that the relegation of English to the position it is henceforth to occupy is a very great mistake. Lord Morley has informed us that this is intended to cut the ground from under the feet of those wicked crammers, who will persist in passing a larger per-centage of candidates than do the Public Schools. If it be desired merely to advantage candidates from Public Schools, would it not be a simpler and more straightforward plan to give them a certain number of marks because they come from one of these institutions? This would surely be better than to degrade a subject which, according to Lord Morley, the Public Schools cannot teach so efficiently as can private tutors. The Public Schools already have many advantages. The preliminary examination, which all candidates must pass before going in for the competitive examination, is conducted privately at many of the Public Schools. This obviously renders it much easier, and instead of a hundred candidates there are only ten or a dozen. The dictation, which causes by far the largest number of failures, instead of being given in a large room, in which all cannot hear well, is quietly read out in a small one, and often by the very master who has been in the habit of giving it to the candidates in question. I believe the reason given for holding these examinations at the schools is the dangers of the young men being alone in London. The same reasoning would apply with greater force to the Eton and Harrow match, the lads in that case not having the restraint of work to keep them straight. But, after all, this is but a small matter. The chief question, fair-play apart, is that the class of young men obtained for the Army should possess such a fair general education as will, with their subsequent training, render them likely to become good officers. I confess it is, to my thinking, rather startling to find that Lord Morley and his advisers not only consider that a knowledge of the candidate's own language is not at all necessary to this end; but that even the history of his country is not so useful as a knowledge of Greek. No one who has not, as I have, to deal with lads fresh from Public Schools, can have any idea of their abject ignorance of English literature and history. I would not complain if their deficiencies in this respect were made up by a corresponding increase of knowledge in Latin and Greek. But this is by no means the case. I constantly have lads come to me who have been five or six years at a Public School, and that not on the public schoolmaster's last sacrifice to modern progress, the "modern side," who know absolutely nothing of Greek, and very little Latin. I mean that, even taking into consideration the very liberal way in which these subjects are marked for Sandhurst—which in itself confers no mean advantage on Public-School boys—they know so little after years of learning that they could not venture to take them up with any chance of success. It seems to me, therefore, that the Marquis of Salisbury is right when he suggests that it is the Public Schools that should have been compelled to conform to modern ideas, and not the Military authorities who should have given in to the antiquated notions of the former. I know, on the authority of one of the gentlemen on the Committee that has instituted this change, that it was introduced to please the Public-School masters. If the present Public School system of education were perfect, there would be no objection to following its lines absolutely in the examination. No one, however, ventures to say that it is, and there is no one acquainted with the educational history of this country but what must be aware that it is to competitive examinations that the advance towards a better state of things, small as it may be, is chiefly due. However, the Military authorities do not propose to limit themselves entirely to the public school curriculum, as the large proportion of marks given to French and German testify, but propose merely to do entirely away with English literature, and to make English history an impossibility. That this will be the case is obvious, when it is seen that 1,500, or at the most 2,000 marks only (if the alteration shadowed forth by Lord Enfield be made) are to be given for this latter subject, which is to embrace a general paper as well as one on a particular period. It is plain that a vast amount of reading will be required of the candidate, considering how little attention is paid to history at our schools; and that while elementary mathematics, French, German, and Latin receive 3,000 marks, and history only 1,500 or 2,000, it would be very foolish to direct a candidate in search of a subject to it. It would seem to me preferable to give 2,000 to general English history, 1,000 to a particular period, 1,500 for general literature, and 1,000 for special authors. Surely it is within the capacity of the Civil Service examiners to set papers which will be beyond the range of mere "cram." It is, of course, hardly necessary to say that no tutor who wished to obtain good marks for his pupils would pursue the lines of study which Lord Morley appears to consider are generally followed. Any tutor worth having makes comments and notes on the authors set, and tests his pupils' knowledge by questioning, but it is ridiculous to imagine that he would wish to limit their reading to any mere précis. I know that many persons think, and rightly, that a good tutor's notes are valuable. I had some time ago a very good proof of this myself, as a master at a well-known public school wrote to one of my own pupils to procure him a set of the notes used at my own establishment. I should therefore leave Class I. as now proposed, and Class II. as under, viz.:—Higher Mathematics, 3,000. English History—General paper, 2,000; period, 1,000; total, 3,000. Greek, 2,500. English Literature—General paper, 1,500; special authors, 1,000; total, 2,500. Political geography, 2,500. Any one of the following, viz., Italian, Spanish, Russian, Turkish, Hindostanee, Arabic, 2,500 (500 for colloquial knowledge). Physical geography and geology, 2,000. Chemistry and heat, 2,000. Electricity and magnetism, 2,000. The candidates to be required to take three out of the four subjects in Class I., and permitted to choose a fourth from Class II. I have added additional foreign languages, and also political geography. Italian, Spanish, and Russian may be taken up for Woolwich—now, why not for Sandhurst? Political geography is a subject on which most Englishmen are woefully ignorant, and which is often of use to an officer, although very imperfectly taught at most public schools. Lastly, I would ask, what have I and other tutors done, that we should be called "crammers"? No one applies this offensive epithet to the private tutors at the Universities, and yet, I suppose, if any one of them were to give up work at Oxford or Cambridge and join me, he would at once sink from the honourable status of the private tutor to that of the despised crammer. The plain truth is that there is no such thing as cramming, and the name has been given by inferior teachers to a standard of teaching they are unable to attain to. One of the chief points of difference between a good private tutor and a Public School is that the former takes very good care never to keep an inefficient instructor, while at the latter, once a master always a master, whether good, bad, or indifferent. Moreover, at a Public School, a boy, if he likes to do so, can idle away his time, and learn practically nothing, the large classes and short hours of work rendering it impossible to watch the individual progress of everybody. At a private tutor's, the classes are smaller and the hours of work somewhat longer, and the distribution of work is so arranged that the lad's weak places are made strong, instead of his time being distributed over his work on one wooden plan, whatever his proficiency in the various subjects. Lord Morley may call the one system "cramming" and the other "teaching;" but I am perfectly willing to leave this question to the general public to decide, merely adding what I constantly tell parents, viz., that a clever boy who works can pass from a Public School; but that there are numbers who, from idleness, neglect on the part of the school instructors, or inferior abilities, cannot do so, though they can with ease from an efficient private tutor. Finally, I would ask the same jury not to believe that all private tutors' establishments are dens of iniquity, and all Public Schools exactly the reverse. It is a matter, alas! of notoriety, that even at the latter, offences against morality are not altogether unknown. I do not mean to say that at every private tutor's a proper supervision is exercised over the morals of the lads; but if such exist, it is the fault of the parents who patronise them, when other establishments are to be found where as strict a watch is kept as at any Public School. As to the anecdote which Lord Morley related about the tutor and the pupil's soul, I have often heard the same repeated, but I should hardly have expected it from the lips of a Member of the present Government, it being usually attributed, with what amount of truth I know not, to a gentleman, whose candidature for Parliament has been frequently, though unsuccessfully, supported by them.—I am, &c., WALTER A. JAMES,

Mentone, March 30. Capt., late R.E.

A chief engineer on the Active List of the Royal Navy, well known for his inventions, has patented in this country, Germany, and America a breechloading gun on entirely new principles, which promises, if adopted, to introduce a new revolution in naval gunnery. He has confined himself to bringing it under the notice of the German and American Governments. A committee appointed by the latter power to report on European ordnance has, it is said, pronounced it, par excellence, the gun of the future, but we doubt very much the truth of this on dit.

ADMIRAL ELLIOT ON THE RAM.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I desire, with your permission, to give expression to my entire concurrence with the opinions you have so forcibly expressed in your Gazette of the 19th inst., on the preponderating influence of the Ram on future Naval battles. The constructive requirements which you have alluded to as being essential to giving substantial effect to this mode of attack cannot be over-estimated, inasmuch as they affect vitally the tactics which will decide future Naval victories, and therefore Naval supremacy. In fleet actions, the invulnerability of the ram bow, next only to numerical superiority,—"grosse bataillons,"—will turn the tide of events, and you truly point out that in both these respects the fleet we possess displays a lamentable deficiency. How, then, are these administrative questions to be made so convincing as to give direction to executive action, and influence national expenditure? Shall we have to wait until the test of failure has taught us the practical results obtainable from end-on attack and defence? and will this wealthy nation keep its purse-strings tied until the day when the conviction arises that the timely expenditure of a few millions as an insurance policy would have averted a great national disaster, attended with financial ruin? We have already seen this Session how completely the question of Naval efficiency is made subservient to party expediency and departmental self-confidence, by the unfortunate result of the debate on Sir John Hay's motion for a Select Committee to inquire into the condition of our Naval forces. The same result has always attended every attempt which has been made to obtain an efficient inquiry into the state of the Navy. Want of confidence in the existing executive is the plea always paraded for exemption from inquiry, and it would appear that nothing but some great catastrophe, such as the loss of the Captain in 1871, will induce any Government, Conservative or Radical, to submit the vital question of the designs for ships-of-war to the crucial test of inquiry. Foreign navies have not been built up on these exclusive principles, but on the careful deliberations of committees of experts, whose reports are based on the evidence of numerous witnesses, and thus reflect the opinions of the Naval service at large on all practical questions of efficiency, without undue interference with the province of the naval architect. Another plea held out against inquiry has been that of the danger of publicity; but surely a select committee might examine witnesses with closed doors, although it appears ridiculous to talk of secrecy so long as our warships are built in private yards, and our dockyards are open to the public. Looking to the universally acknowledged necessity for careful inquiry into all State affairs, it certainly requires more information than has ever yet been afforded to show why, on one subject alone, and that the most vital of all others to national security and the maintenance of our empire, namely, the efficiency of our Navy, departmental exclusiveness should be tolerated which stifles all useful investigation, notwithstanding abundant evidence of errors in judgment, and the absence of skilful foresight leading to wasteful expenditure on faulty designs for ships-of-war. I desire to cast no blame on the hard-worked officials at the Admiralty, as with the best intentions they cannot place themselves on the same vantage-ground for arriving at matured judgment as is obtained by members of a select committee having free scope for obtaining evidence, and time for deliberate discussion; but I deprecate the claim set forth for a monopoly of genius by any one department, on matters of such vital importance. Having sat upon four scientific Committees and one Royal Commission on Naval subjects, I can speak from experience that the process of enlightenment afforded by inquiries of this nature lead to many changes of individual preconceived opinions, thus rectifying errors of judgment previously entertained. For the above reasons, I am convinced of the great advantage which can be derived from frequent ventilation by committees of inquiry of such subjects as are being constantly brought under subjection by the progress of scientific discovery, and nowhere does this wise precaution apply more forcibly than in the practical considerations which affect the efficiency of designs for ships-of-war. I was pleased to find that four experienced Naval officers who took part in the discussion which followed the reading of my paper on "Ramming" were successful prize essayists on Naval subjects, and it is remarkable what close agreement of opinion was expressed by these experts on the importance of end-on attack and defence; in fact, there can be no difference of opinion amongst practical men, about what the future of ramming will bring forth; and yet, looking to the inadequate strength of bow and stern, even in our latest designs for fleet ships, it is evident that sufficient consideration is not being bestowed on this feature of fighting efficiency in the direction of invulnerability. I do not ignore the effect of towing torpedoes in the tactics of ramming, but in contemplating the probabilities of a fleet action, which may lead to the necessity of reversing the engines in order to arrest the speed, or retire by the stern, and thus endanger the fouling of the screws, and also to the movement of friendly ships in close order. I do not think that I should like to be encumbered by having to look after my towing-torpedoes, nor do I think that their presence would have a deterring effect on the stout heart of a captain contemplating the bow-to-bow attack; in fact, these towing-torpedoes might prove as dangerous to friends as to foes in close order of battle. You say that you welcome me as a convert to your creed; I have truly rejoiced to find so able an advocate of scientific naval warfare as yourself; but I would call to your remembrance the dissentient report of Admirals Elliot and Ryder on the Report of the Committee on Designs for Ships-of-War in 1871. You will there find the strongest advocacy of the end-on system of attack and defence, and strongly protected bow and stern, for fleet ships, and a denunciation of central citadels and unprotected ends; and I am convinced that the more this feature of tactics is discussed in Naval circles, the more general will be the conversion to its importance; and I trust that the awakening may no longer be deferred at Whitehall.—I am, &c., GEORGE ELLIOT, Admiral.

We wonder "Peril" does not draw better houses at the HAYMARKET. It is an ingenious adaptation of Sardou's "Nos Intimes," and affords good scope for a great variety of good character acting, to which full justice is done by all the company, except Mr. Conway, whose mannerism and want of "naturalness" are rendered exceedingly conspicuous in a part which very excellent acting can scarcely make tolerable, and which he renders odious. Mrs. Bernard Beere is perhaps a little too grandiose and intense as Lady Ormond, and Mr. Forbes Robertson is sombre and monotonous in the part of Sir George, which he makes, however, eminently respectable. Mr. Bancroft, as the homœopathic, clear-sighted, parable-loving Doctor Thornton, is admirable, and Sir W. Grafton is amusingly played by Mr. Bishop. Nor should Mr. Brookfield and Mrs. Canninge, as the detestable Crossley Becks, be dismissed without a word of praise. The piece is beautifully put on the stage, and is far better worth seeing than most of the plays now in vogue at other theatres.

No novelties have been produced during the week, and few changes of programme have to be noted. At DRURY LANE, "The Bohemian Girl" was repeated on Wednesday evening, and "Carmen" on Thursday and Friday. A morning performance of "Esmeralda" is given this day (Saturday); and in the evening Mr. Maas and Mdlle. Baldi will appear in "Faust." The new opera is postponed till next week.

At the GAIETY, on Wednesday night, the late Mr. H. J. Byron's three-act comedy of "Uncle" and his mirthful burlesque of "The Bohemian G'yurl" were reproduced, two very favorable specimens of the wit and humour of the departed dramatist.

Mr. Collette commenced on Monday a series of morning performances at the PRINCE'S THEATRE, appearing in the comedietta of "Cut Off With a Shilling," and Foote's farce of "The Liar." The attendance has not been encouraging.

At the close of this week the comic opera of "Nell Gwynne" will be transferred to the COMEDY THEATRE, and a new farcical comedy, called "Not a Word," will be produced at the AVENUE.

The VAUDEVILLE was closed on Friday evening, out of respect for the memory of Mrs. Thorne, the wife of the lessee and manager. Mrs. Thorne died on the 18th inst., at Monte Carlo, but the funeral took place in London. As Miss Ada Newton, the deceased actress was a great favourite at the Strand and Vaudeville theatres, and was one of the "Two Roses" in Mr. James Albery's comedy of that name, the other being Miss Amy Fawsitt.

The performance of "Nita's First," at the NOVELTY THEATRE to-day, will be preceded, at 2.30, by the representation for the first time of an original comedietta by Horace Lennard, entitled "Reaping the Whirlwind." Arrangements have been made for the production of the new burlesque-extravaganza, "Lalla Rookh," written by Horace Lennard, music by P. Bucalossi, on Thursday next.

On the "Shakespearian Night" given by Mr. Edwin Drew at St. James's Hall, on Wednesday evening, a scene from "Much Ado About Nothing" was very cleverly recited by Mrs. Aylmer Gowing and Mr. Macdona, a young actor of much promise, engaged by Miss Mary Anderson for her tour.

Mrs. Alfred Wigan, widow of the admirable actor, whom she survived six years, died on the 17th inst. at her residence, Westwood Lodge, Upper Norwood, aged 79. As Miss Leonora Pincott, her professional career commenced when a child. The funeral took place at Kensal Green on Monday.

The trials of machine-guns at Poona, reported in our last issue, have been continued under the supervision of Col. Burnett, Col. Holberton, and officers of the Staff and Royal Artillery. On March 19, the guns were fired in the presence of the Commander-in-Chief at the Kirkee butts, with success. On April 2, the range was increased from 1,200 yards to 1,700 yards, and the Nordenfelt 10-barrel was used, firing the Martini-Henry ammunition. The targets, measuring 100 yards in width by 50 yards in depth, were laid flat on the ground, and quite out of sight from the firing point. The sights of the gun not being graduated beyond 1,400 yards, the elevation required was first determined by sighting volleys. Then 300 rounds were fired, with the result that 293 shots hit the horizontal targets, thus realising as nearly as possible the saying that "Every bullet has its billet." The officers present admitted that when once the range has been ascertained, this machine-gun is terribly effective against a body of men massed together, even if lying down. Such a large percentage of hits could probably never be scored by infantry rifle fire, even at much shorter ranges, if the infantry fired quickly and in volleys; the gun having "no nerves," is, as an old rifle instructor once said about company volley-fire, "strictly impartial."

The Enderley Mills, Limited, has been incorporated for acquiring the factory and business of Mr. Richard Stanway, army contractor and uniform manufacturer, Newcastle-under-Lyme, Staffordshire. The capital is to be £150,000, and we find Lieut.-Col. A. W. G. Fitz-George among the directors.

THROAT IRRITATION AND COUGH.—Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use Epps's Glycerine Jujubes. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the Glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. Sold only in boxes, 7½d, tins, 1s 1½d, labelled "JAMES EPPS and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London." A letter received:—"Gentlemen,—It may, perhaps, interest you to know that, after an extended trial, I have found your Glycerine Jujubes of considerable benefit (with or without medical treatment) in almost all forms of throat disease. They soften and clear the voice.—Yours faithfully, GORDON HOLMES, M.D., Senior Physician to the Municipal Throat and Ear Infirmary."

ANOTHER week of the Gordon controversy, if so it may be called, rages as fiercely as ever. A veil has settled down upon the desert between Khartoum and Wady Halfa, but the Government appears to have some assurance of what is going on at the southern side of it, which renders them at ease in their Parliamentary minds respecting the fate of the Governor-General of the Soudan. Suggestions abound for the delivery of the General, who may, for all we know, be calmly smoking his pipe, and reading his Bible in the Governor's Palace at Khartoum, or may be in the hands of the Mahdi, dead or alive, as Admiral Hewett advertised for the indomitable Osman Digna. Unless, however, he be abandoned by the garrison, or what is worse, be placed face to face with a mutiny, we think there is no reason to fear for his safety at Khartoum, although, no doubt, the climate is very trying at this time of year, and certainly will not improve for some months to come. Provided his ammunition does not fail, and that his men are staunch, Gordon, protected by his steamers, with guns mounted upon them, can sweep the banks of both the White and the Blue Nile; and the entrenchments extended across the southern side of Khartoum would be sufficient to keep the place in safety against any attack from the Arabs landing on the peninsula further to the south, if they were bold enough to cross the river. As long as there is money to pay, such food as the garrison requires will probably be forthcoming; and there is reason to believe that there was a considerable quantity of grain stored up in the bazaars of the town itself. These considerations, however, do not at all affect the general question of what ought to be done for the relief of Gordon and of the people who have remained in Khartoum, trusting to his ability to protect them. For now the whole country is described as being in revolt. In other words, the Arabs of the Desert have flocked in upon the river below Khartoum, eager for plunder; and the unresisting Nubians have, perforce, joined them to secure their own safety. But we do not believe that there are any solid elements of resistance among these levies, even to a small body of Europeans or of Indian troops; and we do not think it matters much of what nationality the Europeans are, as far as fighting them is concerned, whether Turks or British. We may dismiss at once, as utterly absurd and visionary, the project of a volunteer force. It would be easy, indeed, to collect 5,000 of the adventurous rabblement of European cities, or even to furnish them from London and our great towns all ready to sail for Alexandria to-morrow, and to embark upon an undertaking which would task the skill and endurance of military leaders of the highest experience and veteran troops of the very best material; but it is only wonderful that men of sense,—as we must suppose eminent railway directors and great travellers to be,—should appear before the public with offers of subscriptions in furtherance of any such mad project as a volunteer expedition to Khartoum. Gordon's own proposal needs explanation, or, we should say, rather some idea of the state of mind he was in, and the objects he had in view when he suggested "an appeal to the millionaires of England and the United States to raise £200,000." Indeed, from the words of his telegram it would seem as if he meant the money to bribe the Sultan, for his words are,—"Herewith you might obtain the Sultan's permission to lend us 2,000 or 3,000 Nizams," &c.; and he only suggests that the Nizams should be sent to Berber—not to Khartoum. Any way, the idea is impracticable, and it would take far more than four months for Nizams, or volunteers, to enable Gordon to settle his affairs at Khartoum and "to do," as he says, for the False Prophet. Sir Samuel Baker lays down, in the Times of Wednesday, the basis of a portentous expedition, with part of which, we understand, he has already amused the authorities at Cairo. He demands no less than 20,000 men, of whom the Sultan is to furnish 5,000, India 10,000, and England 5,000. We cannot entertain for a moment, in the summer months, the project of a march of 10,000 men from Suakim to Berber as practicable. Sir Samuel Baker enters into minute details, and says he could go into even greater, but he does not favour us with information upon the one vital point. Granted that he has his 20,000 men, his 30 steamers and 10 launches, his 18-knot torpedo-boats and his 100 barges, with steamers fitted as gunboats—steel-plated decks and Nordenfelt batteries—his Naval Brigade powerful winches; stores of dynamite, depôts of coal, six months' supplies,—may we ask how he would establish his advanced post, or how he would lay down his 2,000-gallon tanks at intervals of 25 miles across the desert? It is all very well to talk about their being conveyed by camels in sections, and put together by Arab engineers; but we want to know how the camels would be protected on the march, how the Arab engineers would be protected in their peaceful labours; how the redoubts and powerful mines of dynamite to protect the water stations could be established in the beginning? All this costly and elaborate preparation to ensure water supply would be obviated in the most simple way in the world by the troops sticking, so to speak, to the river the whole way, and never losing touch of it for a moment. The Times, indeed, with incredible obstinacy, continues to nag at the Government for not having sent a force across the desert when Graham was at El Teb; and in the paper in which they dismiss Sir Samuel Baker's plan as impracticable they return to the charge, and illustrate the proposal by referring to the march of Sir David Baird from Kosseir to Keneh,—as if there was the smallest relation between the difficulties of the expedition by the Anglo-Indians to be made by a force crossing the sand mountains and desert between Suakim and Berber. "What Baird did," says the Times, "with 124 miles of desert in 1801, could be done with 240 miles of desert now." Between Kosseir and Keneh there is a beaten caravan track, not badly supplied with water. It is not quite 120 miles by Moiléh, and only 117¼ miles by Russafa. There was, in Baird's time, no enemy to spoil his wells, to cut off his communications, or to harass his flanks. All he had to endure and overcome was the heat, which, we may observe, diminishes pro tanto as we ascend the Red Sea from Suakim to Kosseir. The first wells or springs are at Ambagee, 12 miles from Kosseir; the next, the "English wells," are 15 miles from Ambagee; then comes a stretch of 33 miles to the wells at Hadji Solyman; to Hammamat wells is 24 miles; from Hammamat to Egayta wells, 22 miles, and water is again found at Beer Ambeer, 12 miles from Keneh. The Abahdeh Arabs roam over the country with flocks and herds, and it is the caravan route for camels with corn for Arabia. Such is the route from Keneh to Kosseir. In our last number we gave a description of the obstacles to be encountered in the country between Suakim and Berber, to which must be added now the consideration of the envenomed hostility of all the Arabs with whom, by our terrible massacres of their brethren, we have created an inextinguishable blood-feud. They would probably destroy all the wells, such as they are, in advance of us; and no prudent commander would dream of moving across that dreadful waste without securing all his communications by strong posts, and establishing depôts of water and provisions march by march. We have the same objection, less in degree, to Sir Samuel Baker's project for crossing the desert from Korosko to Abou Hamed. If the expedition goes at all—and we consider it not impracticable to send, even now, provided the materials be well chosen, and placed under men who know how to get the most out of the soldiers—we believe that it must cling to the Nile from end to end, and that it would be much better for them to take the long and tedious detour by the Nile to Berber, than to attempt to cross the desert from Korosko to Abou Hamed. At the latter of those places they would still be 142 miles from Berber, and be obliged to make one desert march. It is quite marvellous to us to learn that an alternative scheme for the river route should be seriously contemplated. The labour, loss of life, and risk involved in creating these water stations would be saved were the troops to march steadily along with their flotilla of the Nile boats from Assouan all the way up to the first point of contact with Gordon. There has been a good deal of erroneous statement, and the expression of considerable misconception in and out of Parliament with regard to this unfortunate mission, of the results of which we are likely to hear for some time to come. One thing is placed very clearly before the public,—that Gordon offered himself, and that he did so, not in the spirit of sacrifice or as a scapegoat, but in the full assurance that he would succeed in carrying out the objects the Government desired, which appear to have been the abandonment of the whole of the Soudan, and the safe retirement of the Egyptian garrisons therein and of those who depended on the protection of the Khedive's Government. The fault committed by the Government is equally plain. They accepted, without judgment or inquiry, the offer of Gordon, whose advice they sought before the mission was thought of; when he said "Send me." Without giving any reasonable thought to the chances of his success or to the grounds of his self-confidence, which might have been a stray verse in the Bible, combined with his previous knowledge of the country, although it is erroneous to suppose that he left it peaceful and prosperous on his last trial, they, according to the bare and ridiculous bargain, sent Gordon,—Gordon pure and simple, without power or resources, without troops or even adequate escort. That they are bound to get him back, having committed this great absurdity, is, we think, incontestible. The Government cannot escape from the necessity of relieving him, even if they were inclined to do so. Over-riding all considerations connected with Egypt, or even the Suez Canal, is now the question of Gordon's delivery.

AMONG the incidental matters cropping up in the discussion, great fuss was made over Sir Evelyn Baring's uncyphered telegram. Any one who has had occasion to send a telegram through the Arab offices south of Siout can best tell what the result of sending a telegram in cypher would have been. It is quite true that at the repeat offices there might have been correspondents capable of reading the English; there might have been even Egyptians who would have mastered the message; but we do not believe that the contents were communicated to the Arab tribes in the desert, or influenced their movements; and we are quite sure that if Sir Evelyn Baring wished to convey an intelligible message to Gordon, he could not have succeeded had he had recourse to cypher. The whole Egyptian question is like one of the mirages which the traveller sees dancing on the desert horizon: now an imposing castle; again, a storied palace, surrounded by groves of trees; anon, a great sheet of water, studded with ships; then a quivering haze, through which monstrous shapes appear and vanish; and again, the horrid black outlines of the granite rocks rising up through the blinding sand. A philanthropic gentleman sails up and down the Nile in his dahabeeah several times, lands at the villages with his interpreter, talks to the head-men, and believes that he is exchanging ideas with them and getting their true sentiments, when they assure him that all they live for and all they hope for is to be immediately annexed to or protected by the great country to which he belongs. He comes home, and, especially if he has written a book relating to temples and mummies, is at once accepted as an authority in Parliament and by the public; he presides at public meetings and is quoted in newspapers. Another gentleman spends all his life in Alexandria or Cairo, trafficking in sugar, and cotton, and cereals, acquainted only with the course of the markets, and with the Europeans and Levantines who are directors of the trade of the place; and he, perhaps, may direct the minds of masses of readers at home by writing a book which is accepted as a perfectly authentic account of the condition of the country. Another may have been engaged for years in what is called missionary work, in which his principal labours have been exercised in comparatively pleasant fields, and in such a man, combined with an immense variety of information about religions and superstitions, tribes and languages, there may be found the most incredible folly and childlike simplicity,—wild ideas like those developed by Dr. Schweinfürth the other day in an evening contemporary, or by Dr. Rohlfs, but they nevertheless go down with large numbers of people as pre-eminent authorities on Egyptian affairs. If England is to undertake for any fixed or indeterminate period the control of Egyptian affairs, she must make up her mind to send out, not a financier, however able in the preparation of a budget, or a second-rate official, but the very best man she can find to accept the post, and clothe him with full power and authority, not to crush all co-operation, to reject all advice, and to destroy all prestige and power in the native rulers, but to carry out a policy of conciliation and reform. There alone lies the chance of safety and success.

THE dissentient Report of Admirals Elliot and Ryder on that of the Committee on Designs for Ships-of-War, in 1871, is well known. As our esteemed correspondent, Admiral Sir George Elliot, reminded us last week, there is to be found in that protest the strongest advocacy of the end-on system of attack and defence, and of strongly protected bow and stern for fleet ships, and a denunciation of central citadels and unprotected ends. But we must remind Admiral Elliot that it was in a great measure due to the Army and Navy Gazette that the Committee on Designs was appointed. We clearly understood that the gentlemen to whom had been confided the task of reconstructing the Navy had been unable to grasp the fact that steam and armour would radically alter Naval tactics. We saw them year by year proceeding on the assumption that battles would be fought out on the same lines as the Naval actions of the past. They adhered to the "broadside-to-broadside" theory, and designed and constructed their ships to be fought in that manner. They took no notice of the fact that French Naval Constructors were designing their ships to meet our broadside or central-citadel ships at their weakest point, namely, end-on. The position we took up then, a position we have held to this day, was one of uncompromising opposition to broadside armour-clads, whether frigate-built or central citadels, with unprotected ends. And our reason for offering this uncompromising opposition, some may call it hostility, to our friends, was and is this. In days gone by, when wooden liners and frigates composed our fleets and squadrons, and were employed entirely in the Navy, experience created a code of Naval tactics. That is to say, possessing as England did the best seamen who at any time trod a deck, Englishmen, ashore and afloat, became habituated to certain modes of attack and defence being resorted to in Naval actions. Our ships bore down upon, or beat up to, their enemy; engaged him at close quarters, yard-arm to yard-arm and broadside to broadside, if possible; or they crossed his bows or stern, and raked him unmercifully whenever practicable, and then fell foul of him, and boarded, trusting to British pluck and cold steel to do the rest. These modes of attack became traditional, and when Sir E. J. Reed undertook the reconstruction of our Navy after the introduction of steam and armour-plates, the ram, and finally torpedoes, he appeared to us to act as if the tactics of the past must of necessity be resorted to in the future. His broadside ships were all designed to take the place of line-of-battle ships. Then he developed his central-citadel ship. In these, the athwart-ship bulkheads forward and aft were designed to prevent the raking broadside taking effect, while the broadside principle remained unimpaired, so as to enable these ships to be fought on the old tactical lines. Mr. Barnaby, when he succeeded Sir E. J. Reed, followed in the same footsteps for a time, and then designed the Inflexible to carry two turrets en échelon, but the central citadel still remained, as did the unprotected ends. We have endeavoured to convince those responsible for the designs from which our fighting ships are built, that the assumption that actions will be fought in the future much on the same lines as they were in the past is erroneous. The French ships are being built for end-on tactics. With steam-power at command, it would be folly to adopt any other plan of attack. Sailing ships were forced, when on a wind or running free, to fight broadside to broadside, and each hoped by well-directed fire to so cripple his opponent as to leave him a log upon the water, and force him to strike or submit to being boarded. But in these days of steam there is no need for ships, unless they funk each other, to fight a circular duel, as did the Alabama and Kearsage. No sensible man would attempt to do so, unless his was a protected ship, as was the Kearsage, fighting a wooden ship, such as the Alabama. Then the great gun duel would tell most fearfully against the unprotected ship. But with two armoured rams the case is quite different. Broadside fighting would only tell in favour of the heaviest-armoured and heaviest-armed ship. Hence, the commander of the lighter ship would do everything in his power to make use of his ram, and by keeping bow-on, avoid, as far as possible, being penetrated by his enemy's heavier ordnance. The latter may, of course, decide on meeting the attack, ram to ram, when the fight becomes a fencing match. In such a case, the quickest eye, the strongest nerve, and the stoutest heart will most assuredly gain the day, provided the ship has been built to ram and sustain the shock of the end-on attack. Have our ships been so built? Most assuredly not. There is not a single armour-clad afloat or building capable of meeting the end-on attack of the Admiral Baudin, and the prospect of having to enter upon a Naval war with our Navy in its present state is anything but reassuring. The whole question resolves itself into this. The French have built ships swifter than ours, able to adopt end-on tactics. We have built ships which cannot obtain the same speed as those of France and Italy, and which are unable to adopt other tactics than "broadside to broadside." Our ships dare not fight end-on, because their extremities are unprotected, and would, if driven against the bow of an advancing foe, telescope. Like Admiral Sir George Elliot, we are convinced that the more the end-on feature of naval tactics is discussed, the more general will be the conversion to its importance, and we, too, trust that the awakening may no longer be deferred at Whitehall.

THE Contagious Diseases Acts came again before the House of Commons on Monday, when Mr. Stansfeld put a question to the Secretary of State for War with regard to the repeal of the Acts. In view of the action of the Government with respect to these measures, the public should thoroughly appreciate the results which have followed their virtual repeal. Both services are suffering from diseases the development of which it is in the power of the Legislature to prevent, and which for years it did check, until sentimentality carried the day, and for all practical purposes annulled every benefit which had been brought about through the operation of the Acts. It is some time now since Mr. Stansfeld, by removing the compulsory examination clauses, succeeded in accomplishing that object. And what is the result? Our Naval and Military hospitals are filled with disease of the most virulent type. We are such a highly moral people, that we endeavour to close our eyes to facts, hoping by that means that the evil we desire to overcome will remedy itself. But what has been the experience of the last twelve months? We must let our Naval and Military medical officers reply to this inquiry. What say these reliable, and we may fairly add unprejudiced, authorities? They assure us that these diseases are on the increase, and are assuming fearful dimensions. And the situation is as bad from a moral as it is from a medical point of view. In some of our garrison and seaport towns, where the good results of the Acts was the subject of general observation, the most barefaced immorality exists unheeded and unchecked. It is now twenty years since a Committee, consisting of the most learned and experienced members of the Medical profession in the country, reported on the operation of the Acts for the Prevention of Contagious Diseases. The Committee examined numerous witnesses of every class, and obtained independent opinions from those in authority. They arrived at the unanimous conclusion that not only were the old Acts necessary for the suppression of disease and maintenance of public decency and morality, but that it was desirable to render the Acts more effective. This Committee particularly investigated the matter with respect to the effect produced by disease on the services. Under this head they reported:—"The injury to the public service is, however, by no means fully estimated by the immediate and direct effects of the sickness of the men who still remain in the Army and Navy. The Committee have received much evidence showing that various other diseases, on account of which a considerable number of men are discharged unfit for service, have their origin in syphilis or in the waste of health which results therefrom." Again, "The evidence obtained by the Committee from the large body of witnesses on this subject is entirely conclusive in favour of the absolute necessity" of compulsory examination. Great importance ought certainly to be attached to these views and opinions, which may be found at length in the report. As matters stand, the valuable advice contained in their report is set aside. The chief arguments against the Acts were that they increased and encouraged women to enter this degrading life, and that they virtually legalised vice. And as for their legalising vice, they had just the very opposite effect, for they recognised the existence of an evil, and sought, by enforcing certain pains and penalties, to bring the evil-doers under the control of the law with the desirable object of protecting the community and helping the fallen ones to redeem their characters and abandon their mode of life. How such humane and Christian Acts can have been objected to by professed Christians; how the House of Commons could have been brought to support a motion which to all intents and purposes undid every bit of good which had been done by the Acts during the twenty years they were in operation; and how any Ministry could have acted with the weakness which has characterised the conduct of the present Government, are quite beyond the understanding of those who have the interest of the services at heart. Here were measures the one effect of which was to do good; which were shown to have done immense good, and which only required to be further developed to have increased the extent of the benefits they produced. And these measures have been swept away, because the Government are so weak and vacillating that they cannot act with the courage of their convictions.

THE Report of the Committee appointed to inquire into the organisation and preliminary training of the Sick-berth and Nursing Staff of the Navy and of Naval Hospitals, consisting of Sir A. H. Hoskins, Sir J. W. Reid, Captain Domville, and Fleet-Surgeon Reid, with Mr. Clark, for Secretary, has been presented to Parliament and published. The Committee visited the Hospitals at Haslar, Plymouth, and Chatham, the Military Hospital at Netley, the depôt of the Army Hospital Corps at Aldershot, and the Civil Hospitals of Guy's, St. Thomas's, and the London University, and obtained the evidence of experienced Naval Medical officers, and of selected men of the Sick-berth Staff. The report now deals most exhaustively with the whole question of nursing afloat, and discloses the fact that the Sick-berth Staff has, up to the present time, been sadly deficient. Lads over 18 years of age, able to read, write, and keep accounts fairly well, were entered as assistant sick-berth attendants on board the various depôt ships, provided they passed the medical examination. Their ultimate promotion to attendant and steward has, however, been entirely a matter of chance. Indeed, promotion appears to have depended entirely, as the Committee state, "on the accidental requirement of the service at each of the home ports or on each of the foreign stations." Hence, much inequality in advancement with reference to age and service existed, the men have been proportionately dissatisfied, and the Service has suffered in a similar ratio. No one at the Admiralty appears to have considered it to be his duty to look after this deserving body, until the advent of Sir J. Reid as Director-General. And yet, these men perform most important duties. Under the direction of the medical officers, they provide for the sick, administer the medicines, cook the food, and clean the sick quarters. They also assist the medical officers in keeping the sick-mess accounts, and medicines, medical stores, and surgical instruments. Nevertheless, these men are, for the most part, without any training. On their return from foreign service, and at the termination of their leave, they are, while waiting draft, supposed, in accordance with the home hospital instructions, to be sent to the hospital of the port, "for employment in such duties as are likely to give them experience, and fit them for their position when serving afloat, but they are not to interfere with the duties of the hospital nurses." The Committee, however, believe that this order has been very imperfectly carried out. They state that "some of these men are retained on board the guardships, performing duties quite foreign to their vocation, such as ships' corporals, postmen's, and others, while those who do go to hospitals, find there no place nor system of instruction for them, and are principally employed as scrubbers, and on labourers' duties." No wonder, then, that the Medical Officers examined by the Committee were unanimously of opinion that this state of things "is very unsatisfactory;" nor are we surprised to find the Committee fully concurring in this view of the present organisation of the Sick-berth Staff of the Navy. Whatever the state of the staff afloat, it might have been reasonably supposed that efficient trained nurses would be found in our Naval hospitals, but the Committee report that the Hospital Nursing Staff "is almost entirely composed of men, without any previous training in their duties or special fitness for them." Now, had such a statement been made by Naval officers in 1784, it would have surprised nobody; but such neglect of the interests of the service to-day, forces us to ask, "What has the Admiralty been about since the Crimean War, the last occasion on which the Naval forces of this country were employed for any length of time?" Since then the Geneva Convention, the attention paid to ambulance work, and the introduction of hospital ships, should have made the necessity for a trained nursing staff so clear, that the state of things existing in the Navy ought to have been remedied long ago by the Admiralty, without calling in the aid of a Committee of Inquiry. The Committee are forced to report that their "strong conviction is that these men nurses are unfit for the care of our sick, and that a complete change of system is absolutely necessary. The existing one is an anachronism, and could not have lasted so long but for its apparent economy, and the disinclination of both officers and men in the Naval service to complain of that which has been so long in existence, and of shortcomings to which each individual patient is but temporarily exposed." Exactly. It is well known in the service that the Naval element is powerless in face of the civilian control of the purse-strings, and that the latter are ever ready to preach the same old tale,—that what was good enough for the Naval Lords, when afloat, is excellently well adapted to the wants of those who have come after them. Reform is the last thing thought of, especially when it means additional expense, be the outlay needed ever so small. We owe the appointment of this Committee to inquire into the organisation and training of the Sick-berth Staff of the Navy entirely to the disclosures made during the Egyptian Campaign. Then the wounded complained most bitterly of the treatment they received on board our troopships. Soldiers, accustomed to better treatment in Military hospitals, raised their voices in condemnation of the Naval sick-berth attendants. Questions were asked in Parliament. An attempt was made to hush the matter up; but such pressure was brought to bear upon the Admiralty, that their Lordships found it absolutely necessary to appoint a Committee of Inquiry, by way of throwing oil upon the troubled waters by which they found themselves so suddenly surrounded. We compliment the members of this Committee on the thorough and fearless manner in which they have performed their duty. Their Report does them the utmost credit, and it is only to be hoped that their recommendations—which we shall discuss in a future article—will be adopted by the Admiralty.

Her Majesty the Queen, the Prince and Princess of Wales and Prince Albert Victor of Wales, Princess Beatrice, the Crown Prince and Princess of Germany, with their son, Prince Wilhelm, of the Imperial German Navy, together with the father of the bride, and the other relations of the royal couple, were present on April 30 at the marriage of Lieutenant Prince Louis of Battenberg, R.N., with Princess Victoria of Hesse, grand-daughter of her Majesty.

As we go to press, news reaches us from Cairo that the King of Abyssinia has declined to allow Admiral Hewett's escort of 200 Bashi-Bazouks to cross the frontier, and that the Admiral had been forced to send back the detachment, so as to be enabled to proceed on his mission. The Admiral was expected to reach Adowa on April 26.

The Earl of Belmore asked the First Lord of the Admiralty on Monday last, in the House of Lords, as to how it was proposed to extend the benefit of the promised increase of full-pay to Lieutenants of ten years' standing to these officers when on half-pay; and Lord Northbrook replied that when on half-pay Lieutenants of ten years' seniority and seven years' sea-time would be paid at the rate of 8s. 6d. a day, the same as the junior Commanders. Lord Belmore expressed a hope that the First Lord of the Admiralty would before he left office, should he remain in much longer, see his way to carrying down the benefit to Lieutenants of eight years' standing, who rank as Field Officers.

The Duke of Edinburgh is about to leave the Mediterranean with the Channel Squadron, which he is now bringing home. The ships are under orders to repair to their respective posts, to grant fourteen days' leave to their crews. The ships will not be refitted, and only small defects will be made good, as the combined Channel and Reserve Squadrons are, according to present arrangements, to proceed at once on their summer cruise.

We understand Commander May, who has just relinquished the command of the Polyphemus, will succeed Captain Holland as Commander of the Royal yacht.

The Admiralty "contradict officially" reports which afterwards turn out to be true. There was an official contradiction by the Admiralty of the report that cholera had broken out on board the Crocodile in the Suez Canal. It now turns out that the casualties were far more serious than reported.

Mr. G. H. Beaton, Inspector of Machinery and Chief Engineer of H.M.'s Dockyard at Devonport, was recently ordered by the Admiralty to make a tour of inspection through the iron and steel districts, and to report upon the manufacturing processes in operation among the firms supplying the Government. Mr. Beaton has now returned to his duties, having visited the works of the Landore and Swansea Companies; Messrs. Cammell and Co., and Sir John Brown and Co., of Sheffield; the Bolton Iron and Steel Company, in Lancashire; and the Leeds Forge Company. We have often been surprised that this has never been done before; but we are now given to understand that it is the intention of the Admiralty to have these works visited annually. This will give engineer officers an opportunity of seeing how various materials they are constantly using are treated, and more especially steel plates for boilers.

We understand that the Marines ordered to garrison Suakim will be supplied with the new khakee uniform.

The Admiralty, having tacked on the Red Sea to the Mediteranean station, have appointed Captain Molyneux, of the Invincible, to hoist the pennant of Commodore of the Second Class at Suakim on board the Sphinx, and to act as Senior Naval Officer in that Division of the station.

The danger of towing torpedoes from the quarters of armour-clads during a fleet action was alluded to last week by Admiral Sir George Elliot in our columns. "In contemplating the probabilities of a fleet action, which may lead to the necessity of reversing the engines in order to arrest the speed or retire by the stern," says Admiral Elliot, "there is a great chance of the torpedo lines fouling the screws, and also of danger to the movement of friendly ships in close order." He would not like to be encumbered with such gear, nor does he think that the presence of towed torpedoes "would have a deterring effect on the stout heart of a captain contemplating the bow-to-bow attack; in fact, these towing torpedoes might prove as dangerous to friends as to foes in close order of battle." These questions have, however, been fully discussed by the French Naval authorities, and every precaution has been taken to render the towed torpedoes safe to the ship towing them, as well as to her consorts. The French order of battle is more open than the English. Men are also stationed by the steam windlasses, ready to shorten in and hoist up the torpedoes when necessary. But what is of more importance still is that the French ships have been designed and built to be fought end-on. French naval officers argue that they will have it in their power to keep their sterns to the English ships, and pound away at them from close quarters, without the slightest fear of being overhauled, at the same time, watching their opportunity to turn, dash at the English ships, and explode the towed torpedo en passant. No doubt, were armour-clads to lie-to, and fight as did old line-of-battle ships in a calm, the towed torpedo would be a source of great danger to the ship and her friends; but the French argue that an action will never again be fought in that manner, if they can help it; and we presume there is some sense in their claim to be able to fight an action now pretty much in that manner which suits them the best.

Lord Alcester on Wednesday inspected the Dolphin and Wanderer, being fitted out at Sheerness for the Red Sea and China station.

The Government have presented the town of Tangier with a complete lifeboat, in recognition of the services rendered by the inhabitants to the British barque Punjaub. They awarded binocular glasses to Rais Abdeslam Balga, captain of the Port, and to Kaid Cid Dris Ben Abdelwahed, commanding the Artillery; a gold medal to Mr. Ricardo Alvarez, and silver medals to Edward Carleton, Rafael Duarte, Eduardo Alcala, and Hamid el Amchott, who particularly distinguished themselves on the occasion.

Commander H. Street has been appointed Assistant-Director of the Indian Marine.

The Socrates and Diogenes, built in Germany, and for many months detained by her Majesty's Government in the Solent, have now been released, in consequence of the treaty signed between Chili and Peru.

Captain Bickford, of the Pegasus, accompanied by the Hon. W. E. Maxwell, has paid a visit to the Rajah of Tenom, who has for some time held the crew of the Nisero as prisoners at Limpang. The English envoys were well received by the Rajah, who, with his people, professed to be well disposed towards England. The Rajah declined to accept money for the release of the prisoners, whom he said he held as hostages in a last attempt to obtain some measure of justice from the Dutch, who had burnt the villages and devastated the country in Acheen, and had now imposed prohibitive tariffs. What the Acheenese wanted was free trade as it existed before the war, and until that fiscal policy was adopted they would not release their captives. We understand the Admiralty are about to order a Naval expedition to start forthwith to release the captives.

The Orwell, Wasp, Britomart, and Banterer have been employed in transporting Irish emigrants to Westport, there to embark on board the Ocean steamer for Canada and the United States.

We notice that the French Government have established a coal depôt at Obok, at the entrance to the Red Sea. Obok has been nominally a French possession for some time past; but, apparently, the idea of maintaining a coal supply there has only been entertained since the establishment of a depôt on Perim. The Eclipse was despatched to Obok just ten months ago to report on the settlement, but found there were then only two French traders there, living in a fortified house, in continual dread of attacks by the natives, who are a fierce and predatory race. A large portion of the slave traffic to the Arabian coast was believed to pass through Obok, and there were at the time of the Eclipse's visit no French officials residing in the place. Probably recent events in the Soudan, have helped to awaken the French authorities to the importance of Obok.

A letter from Villafranca, published by a French paper, gives an interesting account of a recent cruise of the French Mediterranean Squadron, under the command of Vice-Admiral Jaures. The Admiral wished to see if the coast-defence vessels built on the model of the American monitors could accomplish a long distance in concert with the other ironclads of the squadron. In order to make these manœuvres more complete, two torpedo-boats were added. This force, which sailed at break of day on the 14th inst., consisted of the Richelieu, Marengo, Trident, Amiral Duperré, and Redoutable, ironclads; the despatch-boats Renard and Hirondelle; the coast-defence boats Vengeur and Tonnerre; and the two torpedo-boats. The squadron sailed, we presume, from Toulon to Villafranca, to take part in the Nice Regatta, and it was hardly out of harbour when it was caught in a gale from the north-east, which greatly fatigued several of the ironclads, and more particularly the monitors and the Renard. This latter craft and the Vengeur, being unable to bear up against the wind, were obliged to seek shelter not far from the isles of Hyères. During this time the rest of the squadron, violently shaken, and shipping heavy seas at each pitch, held on its course to the east as best it could. The Tonnerre, before reaching the Gulf of Juan, had to ask permission to fall out, as the wind and sea prevented her from keeping her place. The torpedo-boats, however, behaved admirably, but shipped a good deal of water. "These 'tornikroffs,'" says the writer, "are of astonishing rapidity and solidity. Sometimes their crests were seen above the waves, their screws turning in the air, sometimes plunging into the curl of waves, and disappearing. The crew, who stuck to their post, were covered with tarpaulin, without which precaution they would not have been able to hold out." On reaching Villafranca, it was found that every vessel in the squadron had had something carried away,—lifebuoys, grappling-irons, &c. The Hirondelle was sent back to see what had become of laggers. The Renard and the Vengeur were at the isles of Hyères, the Tonnerre at Cape Camarat. The Hirondelle herself in accomplishing this mission had her cutter carried away, and was unable to recover it. The next day, the three lagging vessels rejoined the squadron with great difficulty. The writer concludes that after this trial it is not probable that the French Admiralty will attach any of these monitors to their squadrons. As for the torpedo-boats, their performance is pronounced to have been surprising.

"The poor old soldier who died last month had 46 years' service. He was connected with the Royal Military College for 38 years. Had he retired, as was his right, last January, he would have had a full pension, which he intended to commute for the benefit of his family; but for the convenience of the service and the War-Office clerks, he was kept on till April 1, and he died, and the chance was lost." In these few words there is the story of a useful and honourable life, and a moral at the end of it! We hope the Staff Corps officers, who know the case to which we alluded the week before last, will support General Taylor in his efforts to raise a fund for those the worthy officer has left to the charity of the world.

One part of his functions as Commander-in-Chief is always performed by the Duke of Cambridge with a discrimination which leaves little room for criticism. Although where so much is to be commended in their discharge that each appears at the time to be administered best of all, the inspection of regiments takes, perhaps, the highest place. No matter what the weather may be, the Commander-in-Chief welcomes or sees off service battalions with unfailing assiduity. His remarks addressed to the 65th last Monday must have been very gratifying to the officers and men. The Duke did not fail, whether designedly or not, to accentuate the fact that it was not a boy-battalion, but one that had served for a long time abroad, and had had a lot of hard service in India. But surely it must have been under the magnetic influence of Lord Wolseley's presence that the Duke felt constrained to utter the words into which he diverged from the appearance and work of the 65th. "I always feel persuaded that the English Army is in a condition to meet any emergency, and the circumstances in which this regiment found itself in the Soudan is an instance of what I mean." It may, without presumption, we think, be inferred that what his Royal Highness intended to say was that an English regiment is generally ready for any emergency. It cannot be supposed that the Duke of Cambridge meant to assert that the English Army is now ready for a foreign war, or the despatch of an expeditionary force like that which invaded the Crimea. We cannot suppose, however, that his Royal Highness weighed his words when he said that,—"It always gave him great pleasure to judge personally the condition of troops returning home;" because there have been occasions, rare indeed, but undeniable, on which it could have afforded the Commander-in-Chief no pleasure to witness the condition in which a battalion landed from foreign service.

Now that there is some difficulty about the tartan for the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, it appears to us that the present would be a fitting season—the feather-bonnet controversy being pretty well threshed out—to give the public an authentic account of the origin of the various tartans. Lord Archibald Campbell is an authority on all matters Highland, and would doubtless throw himself into the subject con amore.

In a small pamphlet, called "Hicks Pasha and the Government," published by Stanford, Charing Cross, Major-General Macleod comes forward "in the defence," as he says, "of an old comrade," and pulls out of the Blue-books and Dispatches some exceedingly pregnant bits of evidence to demolish the contention of Mr. Gladstone, that "there was not the smallest shred of evidence to support the idea that General Hicks at any time supposed he was to have the material or moral support of the British Government." It is not necessary for us to consider the excellent service record which the unfortunate Pasha had in her Majesty's Indian Army before he accepted Baker Pasha's offer to go as Chief of the Staff to the Soudan. We must, however, point out that General Macleod is somewhat bold in his assertion that Hicks left London "with the knowledge and consent of the respective authorities in England," if he means by that to imply that any "authorities" in England at all sanctioned his mission or appointment. And in the same way his words, "with the concurrence of the representative of her Majesty's Government," used in relation to his appointment by the Egyptian Government, may be challenged as conveying an erroneous impression. Having said so much, we must say that the special pleading in maintenance of the plea that Hicks Pasha was an outside adventurer cannot be accepted, nor will the disclaimer of his position be credited abroad, or in the East, where he was considered to be a British officer. The repudiation will not go down with people at home, who know that at the time of his appointment the English Government was absolutely the paramount power in Egypt, that it had just swept from the head of the Egyptian Army Baker Pasha, to take charge of the reorganisation of the police, in which position he was called upon to furnish the staff for the corps which was being sent up to Khartoum to make head against the hordes of the Mahdi, and to perform the anomalous duty of selecting officers who had been in the British Army, but had retired.

Sir G. Graham, who has arrived in England, previous to his departure from Egypt, forwarded, through General Stephenson, a correction of his despatch of March 2, from Tokar, in which he says:—"It is regretted that a clerical error should have occurred in the paragraph commencing 'The 1st Gordon Highlanders, 3rd King's Royal Rifles, and 1st York and Lancaster.' For '1st York and Lancaster,' it should have been '2nd Royal Irish Fusiliers.' I had already shown my appreciation of the 1st York and Lancaster Regiment in the preceding paragraph of my despatch."

The Pioneer publishes some alarming telegrams about Russian designs in Central Asia. There are symptoms, says our contemporary, that Russia is preparing to annex Balkh; and it is expected that the British Government will occupy Candahar if Herat passes from the Ameer. There can be no doubt that Russia has begun to see her way to rectify her Asiatic frontier. The declaration of sovereignty over Merv, and the statement of the St. Petersburg press that several tribes between Russia and Afghanistan were anxious to come under the Czar's protection—all goes to show that the Russians are preparing for advance. Whether this development of their Central Asian policy is meant to facilitate other designs in Europe or Asia Minor, or whether its only object is to improve their position as regards India, remains to be seen. Meanwhile, there are signs to be noted on every hand of coming trouble.

The examination difficulty seems to be attracting attention in India as well as at home, for we read in the Pioneer that "an early gazette will cancel several promotions made provisionally of captains to majors—made on the condition that a certain examination must be passed by a certain date, on pain of reversion. It appears that several have failed in the examination last held in England." Our contemporary says:—"It was thought and hoped that this anomaly had died a natural death, and that nothing so absurd would ever be sanctioned again. At the examination last held it appears that not only have those 'plucked' been more numerous, but that there has been a great increase in the proportion of failures; and there is no doubt but that the examination papers as set by the examiners at home, do not test the qualifications of officers. This has been fully proved, and it is to be trusted that an alteration will be made."

During the past year, of the 550,800 men constituting the standing army of France, about 5,000 men, or nearly 10 per cent., were prosecuted for various offences. Of this number, 800 were acquitted, 41 were condemned to death, 106 were sentenced to imprisonment in a fortress, and 86 were punished by having their length of service increased. Of the 41 death sentences, 32 were carried out, one of them by hanging. Half of the prisoners were accused of insubordination or desertion. Of 26,000 officers, eight were placed before courts-martial; of 40,000 corporals and serjeants, 113 were prosecuted.

The weekly overland Summary of the Times of India comments on an unpleasant occurrence at Bombay; but as we have not the papers before us, we prefer to express the hope and belief that the officer referred to did not act deliberately in the manner described by our contemporary. The paper says:—"Some correspondence has been published with reference to an occurrence in which Captain Fergusson, nephew of the Governor of Bombay, and a member of his Excellency's Staff, assaulted some railway Sepoys with whom he had an altercation. The affair has excited much attention in Bombay." It naturally should do so, if our contemporary's story be true. According to the Times of India, as a large number of carriages were driving back from the evening Church service, on Sunday, March 23, by the Churney Road, the Sepoys closed the gates, a train being due. The officer drove up, and ordered that the gates should be opened. This order the Sepoys could not obey. "He opened one gate on his own responsibility. One of the Sepoys put up the danger-signal, so as to prevent an accident, and then they both seized the horse's head. The officer thrashed them with his whip, and as they would not even then let go, he alighted and attacked them with his fists. They managed, however, after one of them had been badly mauled, to get him down. In the meantime the train came up, and but for the foresight of the Sepoy in starting the danger-signal, there would have been a terrible accident, for the line was, by this time, covered by a crowd of excited natives. The train drew up in front of them, was delayed, we believe, for more than 10 minutes, and some European gentlemen having by that time come on the scene, the officer was helped on to his dog-cart, and while the Sepoys were waiting for his card, which it was understood they were to receive, managed to dash off."

Within the last two or three months, the question of arming the entire German Army appears to have greatly approached its solution, although opinions still differ as to the exact form of mechanism to be adopted. It is certain, however, that a decision will shortly be arrived at, as the workshops of the Government gun factories at Spandau have just been closed for a period of several months, for the purpose of erecting special machinery and tools for turning out large quantities of magazine rifles within a very short space of time. A report is current to the effect that the recent improvements in rifle powder will lead to the adoption of a smaller cartridge for the repeater than the one at present in use.

PENSIONS IN ARREAR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Since the abolition of Purchase in the Army, and the wars of 1866-70—Austro-Prussian and Franco-German—the British and Anglo-Indian Armies have undergone many changes in organisation and administration. Whether or no such changes are for the better is beside the matter I desire, with your permission, to urge through the medium of your columns. Suffice it to say that I now find myself, with an innumerable host of others, a pensioner for my past services; and whereas when on the Active List I enjoyed a privilege, through my regimental agents, of drawing my pay in advance, I have now to labour under the disadvantage of drawing my pension quarterly in arrears, and am thereby put to considerable inconvenience. The trading or commercial world has also moved with the exigencies of the times, as instanced by the credit being superseded by the ready-money system. Co-operative supplies—Whiteleys, et hoc genus omne—have sprung up in our midst, and the order of the day is, therefore, perforce, cash on delivery, even to approved customers. It would be viewed as absurd, if not incredible, were I to say that the members of the services now on the Pension List are, as a body, wealthy, and that the majority have, or can maintain, under such system of payment, the necessary balance at their agents to enable them to conform without great inconvenience to the commercial practice of the day. The system of payment of pensions quarterly in arrears is an anachronism, and untenable under the happily altered conditions of commercial enterprise. To advocate a reform—monthly payment in arrears—through the Press will, I trust, meet with the approval of others similarly situated as myself. Should such be the case, I would suggest that steps be taken to obtain a hearing in the proper quarter, by means of a deputation representing the case of pensioners of every degree, from generals to privates, admirals to sailors. My reason for this suggestion is that the authorities are so pre-occupied in the daily routine of their offices, that the necessity for such reform can hardly be expected to occur to the official mind not seriously similarly inconvenienced.—I am, &c.,

PENSIONER.

THE ROYAL MARINES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Will you allow me to offer a remark on one of the headings of your most kindly article anent the Royal Marine Corps in your issue of April 5th, which in everything except the one point which I venture now to bring before your notice, is most admirable, and calculated to do the corps great service? The one point is where you state that in many cases the captains of ships do not grant leave to the officers commanding Marine detachments serving on board to punish their own men when brought up as defaulters. In this I would beg to differ from you. With some experience of ship's routine, I have never come across one of these cases. I have made enquiries in the ships of the Mediterranean Fleet and Channel Squadron, and I find that in each of them the commanding officer of Marines invariably has the same disciplinary powers as, in the absence of the commander, would be delegated to the first lieutenant. There are certain punishments, such as confinement in cells, deprivation of badges, or reduction in class for conduct or leave, which can be inflicted by the captain alone. Next to the captain, the commander possesses the fullest powers, but these are very little in advance of those possessed by the first lieutenant and the commanding officer of Marines. I should not venture to trouble you with these remarks, but that the rest of your article is so admirable, and has the interest of the corps so much at heart, pointing out so clearly what are our substantial hardships—the non-employment of General officers, the not sufficient employment of lieutenant-colonels, and the almost total ignoring of the claims of our officers for Staff appointments, to say nothing of other matters in which we feel equally acutely, but which we do not care ourselves to drag into public notice; while among the non-commissioned officers and rank and file, the disadvantages as regards rations, deferred pay, and pension from which our men suffer, as compared with soldiers. All this is so true and admirably stated, that it would be a pity if a slight misconception were allowed to spoil it.—I am, &c.,

A MARINE.

[Although, as stated by our correspondent, most Naval captains do delegate the power to punish Marine defaulters to the officer commanding the detachment, there are post-captains who do not do so. What is required, is a definite order to do so.—ED. A. & N. G.]

The letters of allotment of the seven-per-cent. preference shares in the Minas Central Railway of Brazil (Limited), have been posted.

The Army.

7th Dragoon Guards. The depôt has moved from Shorncliffe to Canterbury.

10th Hussars, who lately returned from the Soudan, proceeded from Shorncliffe to Canterbury on Sunday, where a special thanksgiving service was held at the cathedral. On their arrival at Canterbury the troops were met by an enthusiastic crowd, which accompanied them to the cathedral. The service was a full choral one, with a Te Deum, and the Dean delivered an address. The officers and about 454 non-commissioned officers and men were afterwards entertained at luncheon at the Music Hall by the generosity of Sir Edward Watkin and the directors of the South-Eastern Railway Company. Mr. Shaw (the secretary), Mr. Myles Fenton (the general manager), and Mr. Willis were present on behalf of the South-Eastern Company. At the conclusion of the repast, the officer in command expressed great satisfaction at the arrangements which had been made. The special train in which the regiment travelled to and from Canterbury was gratuitously provided by the South-Eastern Railway Company.

11th Hussars. The following, from the Times of India, will be read with interest by Gen. Annesley's old friends, the "Cherubim's":— "The news that Brigdr.-Gen. Annesley, Adjt.-Gen. of the Bombay Army, is obliged by the state of his health to take leave to England, will be received with regret by Military men in this Presidency. Gen. Annesley was appointed Adjt.-Gen. in February, 1881, and when he took charge of his office there were not wanting those who foretold that the brilliant cavalry officer would turn out a failure in his new appointment. It was supposed to be a Horse Guards' job, sending him out to India, and a good deal of soreness was felt and expressed that the step had not gone departmentally. But during the three years that have elapsed since Gen. Annesley became Adjt.-Gen. of the Bombay Army there has been plenty of time to arrive at an unbiassed opinion in regard to his merits, and we believe we are right in saying that the verdict is entirely favourable. When Gen. Annesley took over the charge of his office in Feb., 1881, he necessarily came to his duties knowing nothing whatever of the Bombay Army, and ignorant of local methods of carrying on business. [Why "necessarily," good Times of India? There is no special mystery about the Bombay Army, and Col. Annesley had very large experience of India before he left the Horse Guards for Bombay.—Ed. A. & N. G]. But he set himself to work with the utmost vigour, and soon mastered details, and never lost an opportunity of making himself acquainted with as many officers as possible. Of one thing Gen. Annesley is as profoundly ignorant now as he was the first day he stepped into the Adjutant-General's office in Poona, and that is, of cliques. He has kept himself entirely aloof from those small official coteries for which Poona used to enjoy such an evil reputation. He has none of that official 'side' which flourishes in India as elsewhere, but receives every one, colonel or subaltern, with the same courtesy, and listens to their representations with equal patience and consideration. If we have gone into these details, it is because during the three years Gen. Annesley has been with us he has kept himself so much in the background that little is known outside a small circle of the good work he has been doing for the Bombay Army, and we are sure every one will join with us in wishing him a speedy return to his duties, with renewed health and strength for their performance."

15th Hussars. Col. Luck, C.B., relinquished the command of the regiment at Aldershot on Tuesday, on the expiration of his five years' tenure.

19th Hussars. The regiment arrived at Abbassiyeh from Suakim on the 6th ult., in two parties, at 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. respectively. On the arrival of the first party, the band of the Essex Regt., being then on church parade, greeted them with "See the Conquering Hero Comes." Col. Barrow, who had driven from Cairo in a carriage to meet his regiment on its return, was saluted with three hearty cheers from the non-commissioned officers and men. After having stabled their horses, the serjeants, on the invitation of the members of the Essex Regt.'s serjeants' mess, adjourned to a substantial breakfast, and each troop of men was entertained by its corresponding company in the 56th. Open house was kept all day long, dinner and tea being also provided by their liberal entertainers. The second party was treated in a similar manner on their arrival. Lieut.-Gen. Stephenson, after an inspection of the regiment on the 7th ult., addressed them as follows:— "Officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the 19th Hussars,—It affords me the utmost pleasure to welcome you back after having so bravely and fearlessly discharged the arduous duties of the past few weeks. I believe, from the many accounts I have heard, that your conduct has been excellent, and that at El Teb your steadiness and courage, and the way in which you charged the enemy, called forth the admiration of everyone. You have not only won the praise of the people here in Egypt, but at home in England your fame is ringing far and wide. I thank you, not only for the good name which will henceforth attach itself to the Army of Occupation in Egypt through your gallant conduct, but also for the additional lustre you have shed on the whole British Army. I may add that the success of the battle of Tamai is also largely due to the work of the 19th Hussars. I feel proud of the regiment, which has now been for so many months under my command."

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Lieut.-Col. N. H. Harris, who has been doing duty at Aden, has been appointed to the command of the Royal Artillery at Kirkee.

Capt. J. W. T. Spencer, A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Smyth, commanding the Woolwich District, has been appointed brigade-major at Sheerness.

The depôt North Irish Division moved on Thursday from Belfast to Londonderry.

A coroner's inquest was held at Hexham on Thursday on the body of Brevet Col. H. J. F. Hickes, B Brig., R.H.A., whose marriage with Miss Ligertwood, daughter of Mr. J. Ligertwood, sheriff clerk of Aberdeenshire, was celebrated in Aberdeen last week. Mrs. Hickes said she and her husband arrived at High Warden Hall, on their wedding tour, on Tuesday night. Her husband appeared to be in good health. He slept well during the night. In the morning he complained of a pain across his chest. He walked up and down the room once or twice, still complaining of his chest. He endeavoured to get into bed, but could not do so, and sank down by the bedside, without speaking. He did not breathe easily while he paced the room. She could remember nothing else. Mr. H. S. Karr, barrister, living at High Warden, said he had known Col. Hickes for several years. On Wednesday morning, between 5 and 6 o'clock, his wife came into witness's room in a very alarmed state, and said her husband had been taken suddenly ill and had fallen as if in a fit. Witness at once went to the bedroom and found him lying on the floor with some pillows under his head, which his wife had put there. Witness raised his head and put some whisky into his mouth, and he gave a sort of sigh. He never moved or spoke. Witness sent for Dr. Jackson, of Hexham. Dr. Jackson stated that he was summoned to High Warden on Wednesday morning and examined the body. Col. Hickes was quite dead, but had a lifelike appearance. He had died from angina pectoris. A verdict of "death from natural causes" was returned. Deceased was born Oct. 5, 1834, and entered the Army, April 10, 1854; became lieut., Oct. 5, 1854; capt., June 7, 1860; brevet major, Feb. 16, 1861; brevet lieut.-col., Dec. 29, 1871; brevet col., Oct. 1, 1877; and lieut.-col. (substantive), Sept. 10, 1880. He served in the Crimean Campaign from Nov., 1854, including the siege and fall of Sebastopol (medal with clasp, Knight of the Legion of Honour, and Turkish medal). Served as A.D.C. to Brigdr. Crofton with the expedition to China in 1860, including capture of Taku Forts and surrender of Pekin (medal with two clasps, and brevet of major).

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The order for the removal of No. 8 Company from Gosport to Pembroke and Cork has been countermanded.

3rd Buffs (East Kent Regiment). Lieut.-Col. Halahan has arrived home from China for duty with the 1st Batn., to which he was recently posted on promotion.

4th King's Own Royal Lancaster Regiment. Lieut.-Col. A. J. Sykes, on the Retired List, died at Bauldon, near Reading, on the 28th ult., aged 53 years. Col. Sykes entered the Army Aug. 17, 1852; became lieut, Sept. 15, 1854; capt., Feb. 1, 1856; major, May 3, 1871; lieut.-col., Oct. 1, 1877; and col. on retirement, July 9, 1879. He served with the regiment throughout the Eastern campaign of 1854-55, including the battles in the Crimea and siege and fall of Sebastopol (medal with three clasps, Sardianian and Turkish medals).

5th Northumberland Fusiliers. The 1st Batn. moved on Thursday from Mullingar to Dublin.

10th Lincolnshire Regiment. Lieut. Rawlinson, 2nd Batn., has leave for 15 months, on private affairs.

12th Suffolk Regiment. Lieut. Walter, 1st Batn., has leave for six months, on private affairs.

13th Somersetshire Light Infantry. Major Evans, 2nd Batn., has leave for 15 months, on private affairs.

15th East Yorkshire Regiment. Capt. Allen, 1st Batn., has taken up the duties of Brigade-Major at Belfast, vice Major Goldsmid, 104th Fusiliers, transferred to the Horse Guards.

16th Bedfordshire Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Wetherell, 2nd Batn., is under orders for Burmah to take command, in place of Col. Adcock, whose period of service expires on July 2. An exchange has been sanctioned between Lieuts. Schreiber, 2nd, and Croasdaile, 1st Batn.

18th Royal Irish Regiment. A correspondent writes:—"A report is gaining currency that Prince Albert Victor of Wales is likely to join the Royal Irish Fusiliers. The 18th, or Royal Irish Regt., is par excellence the regiment of Ireland, and as such has a far greater claim than any other to the honour of having his Royal Highness as an officer in its ranks. The Royal Irish Rifles also claims seniority of the Royal Irish Fusiliers."

21st Royal Scots Fusiliers. The serjeants of the 1st Batn. gave a performance in the Engineers' Theatre, South Camp, Aldershot, on the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th inst., for the benefit of the Female Hospital, the demands on its resources being very large. The amusement opened with the farce "His Last Legs." The drama of "The Ticket-of-Leave Man" was the piece of the evening, and very creditably was it placed before the public. The Staff night brought a house full of officers and ladies, amongst whom were Major-Gen. Fielding and Col. and Mrs. Gildea. An exchange has been sanctioned between Majors Whitten, 2nd, and Hewat, 1st Batn.

22nd Cheshire Regiment. Lieut. Anderson, 2nd Batn., attached to the 3rd Punjab Cavalry, is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from Sept. 8, 1882.

29th Worcestershire Regiment. Lieut. Browning, doing duty with the 4th Punjab Infantry, is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from Feb. 16, 1883. Major W. Boycott, late of the regiment, died at Hawkstone, Woodside, Natal, on March 11, aged 44 years. Major Boycott entered the Army Dec. 18, 1857; became lieut. Dec. 2, 1859; capt., Dec. 2, 1862; major, Oct. 31, 1874; and subsequently retired by sale of his commission.

30th East Lancashire Regiment. Major Goodwyn has leave, on private affairs. Qrmr. Ryan has leave for 15 months, on private affairs.

37th Hamsphire Regiment. Capt. C. W. Farwell, late of the regt., died on the 6th ult. at Horley, Surrey, aged 53 years.

40th South Lancashire Regiment. Major Linton has been granted leave for eight months, on urgent private affairs. Lieut. Dun, a probationer, doing duty with the 8th N.I., is about to be appointed to the Bengal S.C. from March 26, 1882.

ROYAL MARINES.

A force of Royal Marines, consisting of Major and Brevet Lieut.-Col. N. F. Way, Major G. S. Nash, Capts. J. A. R. McKechnie, G. Hobart, A. St. L. Burrowes, and A. C. Pearson, Lieuts. G. F. Onslow, F. G. Cotter, A. Brine, E. F. Evans, C. E. Lloyd, H. S. N. White, C. E. E. Curtoys, and H. W. Logan-Home, one hospital serjeant, one armourer-serjeant, four colour-serjeants, 14 serjeants, 17 corporals, six buglers, and 242 privates, has been ordered to embark at Gravesend, on May 7, on board the P. and O. Company's steamer Deccan, which will convey them to Port Said, to reinforce the battalion at present serving in Egypt under the command of Lieut. Col. Ozzard.

Lieut. W. G. Speed, R.M., having been appointed Assist.-Musketry-Instructor of the Chatham Division, has joined the Musketry Depôt, Milton, for duty.

Lieut. H. S. N. White, R.M., has been ordered to rejoin Head-quarters, Chatham, from the School of Musketry, Hythe, for embarkation for service in Egypt.

Capt. A. St. L. Burrowes, R.M., has rejoined Head-quarters, Chatham, from leave, for embarkation for service in Egypt.

The Portsmouth Detachment, R.M., ordered to reinforce the battalion now serving in Egypt, will proceed direct to Gravesend on May 7, and embark immediately on board s.s. Deccan.

The Plymouth Detachment, R.M., ordered to reinforce the battalion now serving in Egypt, will proceed to join Chatham Head-quarters on May 6.

Capt. A. C. Pearson, R.M., has been ordered to rejoin Head-quarters, Chatham, from the Depôt, Deal, for embarkation for service in Egypt.

The Admiralty have been pleased, on the recommendation of the General Officer commanding the Soudan Expedition, to approve of Gunner C. H. Morris, 5th Company, Royal Marine Artillery, being paid an allowance of 1s. 6d. per diem during the period he was acting as interpreter to the Royal Marine Forces serving with the recent expedition.

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. The 3rd Batn. is ordered to proceed from Suakim to Cairo, in consequence of ill-health. Mr. Dawnay asked the Secretary of State for War if his attention had been called to the following paragraph in a telegram sent by the Cairo correspondent of the Standard, and published in the issue of April 28:—"I have heard indirectly that the state of the 60th Rifles at Suakim calls for serious consideration. Insufficient camping ground and want of water are reducing that gallant regiment to a condition anything but creditable to the authorities, or accordant to the deserts of the men;" and whether he would cause an inquiry to be made into the truth of such statement. The Marquis of Hartington said, in reply: "The only information we have on this subject is contained in a telegram received from the general officer commanding in Egypt, dated the 27th of this month, in which he recommends the departure of the battalions from Suakim on the ground of health and the absence of suitable shelter." Mr. W. H. Smith asked whether the Marines who were to relieve the battalions at Suakim would be landed under precisely the same conditions as they were now, or whether the Admiralty would make arrangements for their accommodation. The Marquis of Hartington believed the Admiralty would make arrangements for a floating barracks for the Marines.

61st Gloucestershire Regiment. Lieut. Banes has leave for 12 months, on private affairs.

63rd Manchester Regiment. We stated in our last issue that the regiment occupied quarters at the Tower during the absence of the Guards in Egypt. It would have been more accurate and in accordance with facts had we said in relief of the Guards for Musketry, after the return of the regiment from Egypt. It is only due to the regiment, which did excellent service in Egypt, that the correction should be made.

65th York and Lancaster Regiment. The Duke of Cambridge, accompanied by Lord Wolseley, &c., inspected the regiment at Dover on Monday on its return from the Soudan. After the inspection, the Duke addressed the regiment as follows:—"It always gives me great pleasure to have an opportunity, when a battalion, or part of a battalion, returns home, of seeing the troops and of judging personally of their condition. I take particular pleasure in doing so when that regiment has had the advantage and honour of taking part in any active operations in the field. I am very gratified this morning to see the efficient state in which this regiment has paraded. As far as I can judge it appears to me that the men look wonderfully well and healthy, considering all the hard work they have had and the changes of climate they have experienced during their long service abroad. As regards the conduct of the regiment, I am glad to say nothing can be said against it. After a lot of hard service in India, the regiment was returning home, when it was suddenly required to take part in the recent operations in the Soudan, and the manner in which it did its duty there was most creditable. You may well be proud of being a portion of her Majesty's service. I always feel persuaded that the English Army is in a condition to meet any emergency, and the circumstance in which this regiment found itself in the Soudan is an instance of what I mean. The regiment was ordered home after long service in India; suddenly the emergency arose, and it was called upon to take the field. There was no regular preparation made; it was ready to take the field at once. I believe either the same night, or the morning after it landed, it actually had a sharp engagement, and had an opportunity of distinguishing itself. This shows how very necessary it is for any portion of the Army to be prepared for the field in any circumstances. It also shows the necessity for officers being well qualified to adapt themselves to any emergency that may arise. I congratulate you, Col. Byam, with your battalion, on having had the opportunity of seeing active and hard service, and on having rendered such a good account of yourselves, and I am glad to welcome the battalion home now to ordinary duty, which I hope it will perform with as much credit to itself as it did by its conduct in the field." Subsequently all the officers stepped forward from the ranks, and were addressed, some of them personally, by the Duke of Cambridge.

69th Welsh Regiment moved on Thursday from Londonderry to Mullingar.

79th Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders. The regiment has been moved to Alexandria from Cairo. Lieut.-Col. J. H. Wyatt, C.B., formerly of the regiment, and afterwards of the Military Train, died at Port Dinorwic, North Wales, after a brief illness, on the 26th ult., aged 53 years. Deceased was J.P. of the county of Carnarvon. He entered the Army Sept. 20, 1884; lieut., June 26, 1826; capt., Aug. 3, 1855; brevet major, April 26, 1859; major, Dec. 26, 1863; and was promoted to an unattached lieut.-colonelcy on the disbandment of the Military Train. He served in the India campaign of 1857-58, including the relief of Lucknow by Lord Clyde; commanded the Military Train acting as cavalry throughout the Suahabad campaign (twice mentioned, brevet of major, medal with two clasps, and C.B.)

87th Royal Irish Fusiliers. A detachment, consisting of two officers and 320 men, which was left at Aldershot on the departure of the regiment for India, left the Camp on Friday last, and proceeded by a special train to Portsmouth to join the 89th, which has just arrived home from India. On the departure of the detachment, the men were addressed by Sir A. Alison, who spoke in complimentary terms of their very good conduct during the long period they had been under his command. The orderly behaviour of these young soldiers, in marked contrast to that of other detachments similarly situated, is in no small degree attributable to the manner in which they were dealt with by the officers and non-commissioned officers of the 3rd Batn. Rifle Brigade, to which regiment they were attached.

95th Derbyshire Regiment (Sherwood Foresters). Major Tower has leave for six months, on private affairs.

97th Queen's Own (Royal West Kent Regiment) moved on Thursday from Dublin to the Curragh.

101st Royal Munster Fusiliers. Major Hare, whose services were recently placed at the disposal of the Egyptian Government for employment in the Egyptian Army, has been appointed commandant of the 1st Batn. of that force.

104th Royal Munster Fusiliers. Major Goldsmid, from brigade-major at Belfast, took up the appointment of D.A.Q.M.G. at the Horse Guards on the 1st inst., vice Lieut.-Col. Furse.

108th Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers. Col. Stokes and the officers gave a ball at Limerick on Tuesday night. The dance music was performed by the band, under the leadership of Mr. C. M'Laren, bandmaster. The ball-room was most artistically decorated, and the supper was of the most récherché character. Dancing was kept up till an advanced hour. The ball committee consisted of Major Crawford, Capt. Greenfield, and Mr. Silverthorne.

Rifle Brigade. Capt. G. S. Byng, late of the regt., has succeeded to the title and estates of the peerage of Torrington, by the death of his uncle, the seventh viscount.

Medical Department. Brig.-Surg. J. Wood, medical officer 38th-64th Regtl. District, died at Lichfield on the 27th ult., aged 58 years. The deceased entered the Army Jan. 10, 1855; became surg. Nov. 9, 1867; and was retired upon half-pay, Feb. 11, 1880. He served in the Crimea from June 19, 1855, including the siege and fall of Sebastopol, and attack on June 18 (medal with clasp, and Turkish medal).

Army Pay Department. "F. G. S." writes:—"When this Department was formed, the Warrant was fenced in with sundry provisos which effectually barred the promotion of a large number of officers, especially the one which rendered a Staff paymaster ineligible to promotion to rank of chief paymaster during the last two years of service prior to compulsory retirement. No such rule is applied in any other Department, and at the present time, when four or five steps are expected during the present year, if carried out or not altered in proposed new Warrant, it will act most harshly and detrimentally in the cases of several Staff paymasters, all of whom have long foreign service. Your inserting this letter may draw attention to the unfairness of the regulation." Major J. G. Anderson, paymaster of the 87th Fusiliers, and formerly captain in the same regiment and also in the 64th, died suddenly at Murree on the 25th ult. Major Anderson was well known as a powerful man and good gymnast before he joined the Pay Department in 1878. He was one of the first officers to go through a course of instruction at Oxford under Mr. McClaren, and was afterwards gymnastic-instructor to a battalion of the Guards at St. John's Wood Barracks. As is often the case with men of great strength, Major Anderson was one of the most kind-hearted and gentle of men, so much so that during his probation for the Pay Department he earned the soubriquet of the "Baby." His sudden death will be deeply felt by a large circle of friends.

MILITIA.

Queen's Own (Royal West Kent Regiment). Viscount Torrington died suddenly at the Hôtel des Anglais, Monte Carlo, on Sunday morning, aged 71. He was, from his early days, directly and intimately connected with the Court, and it fell to his lot to escort the Prince Consort to England. He was Governor of Ceylon from 1847 to Oct., 1850. The present generation can scarcely recollect the hot debates in Parliament which were raised in connection with the punishment inflicted by the Governor on the leaders of the Cingalese rebellion, especially the execution of a Buddhist priest, in consequence of which he was recalled, and was never again employed in the service of the State, for which, by his ability and many excellent qualities, he was eminently qualified; but people who are acquainted best with the circumstances of the Island of Ceylon at the time, and who have lived up to the present day, will be ready to admit that the acts of severity which cost Lord Torrington so dearly gave a fatal blow to the spirit of religious and quasi-national insurrection, and that ever since that time the island has been a political Arcadia. What the country lost the Court gained, for soon after his return to England his merits were perceived by one who had a clear insight as regarded the qualities desirable in those attached to his person in a position of delicacy and difficulty. In Jan., 1853, he was appointed Lord-in-Waiting to the Prince Consort, on whose death he was again appointed Lord-in-Waiting to the Queen, which he held up to the time of his death. He was appointed deputy-lieutenant of Kent in 1851; was lieut.-col. of the West Kent Militia from 1854 to 1862, when he was appointed hon. col. His lordship had been for some time in rather delicate health, but the attack in his throat of which he died was quite sudden. The funeral took place yesterday, at Merewood, near Tunbridge.

A special order has been issued describing the various proposals by which it is expected that the shooting powers of the Militia will be improved. The following are the principal points of the new regulations, which take effect at once:—"All serjeants of the permanent staff of infantry Militia battalions will annually go through a course of three days' preliminary drill and four days' target practice. The practice will be conducted under the adjutant, and, when possible, before the recruits assemble for preliminary drill, or after the dismissal of the battalion from the annual training. The following staff serjeants may be exempt from the annual course, at the discretion of the commanding officer:—Serjt.-major, qrmr.-serjt., serjt.-instructor of musketry, pymr.-serjt., orderly-room serjt., serjt.-drummer, and serjt.-bugler. Every recruit will, during his 'preliminary drill,' undergo a course of ten days' musketry training. Every Militiaman will annually, except in the year in which he is trained as a recruit, be exercised in a trained soldiers' seven days' course. Battalions of more than six companies may, at the discretion of the general officer commanding, be exercised by half-battalions in alternate years. Two companies of a battalion will be struck off duty for musketry at the commencement of the training, and will complete their preliminary drill and individual firing and then return to duty. When the first two companies have completed their preliminary drill two more companies will be struck off duty and similarly exercised, and so on in succession until all the companies of a battalion have completed their preliminary drill and individual firing, when the battalion will be struck off duty by half-battalions at a time for practice at the 'figure target,' and in volley and independent firing. The 'figure of merit' will be the aggregate average points in the individual, the 'figure target,' and the volley and independent practices. The best shooting company, the figure of merit, of the battalion and its classification, will be published annually, except when less than 70 per cent. of the men effective (excluding recruits) in the battalion or half-battalion, as the case may be, have been exercised through the course of target practice. Money prizes will be granted for good shooting, and they will be awarded to the successful competitors by the officer commanding the battalion, to the permanent staff on the completion of their course, and to the other non-commissioned officers and men before their dismissal at the end of their training. Where not otherwise directed, the Musketry Regulations for the Army, 1884, will be strictly adhered to."

THE VOLUNTEERS.

"A Retired Field-Officer" writes:—"I was present at the late Easter Monday Review at Dover, and I can testify to the fact that the conduct of the Volunteers, both in the field and in the town, was admirable. I closely scrutinised several of the regiments whilst they were engaged with the enemy, and was greatly pleased to observe that 'fire discipline' was most conspicuous by its presence. The men took deliberate aim, and never fired without their seeing their men. I also noticed that in the rapid independent firing, the smoke of the powder always came out horizontal, and not as if veritical fire was being practised. Anyone who has witnessed a review of regular troops at Aldershot will know what I mean. The men were well in hand, and appeared to pay attention to their officers. I never saw or heard a whistle on that day, and this points to the fact that our Volunteer officers are not provided with that useful adjunct to the human voice (military). The marching-past was not all it should have been. Distances were nowhere, and the saluting was decidedly bad. Exceptions there were, of course, and I would be allowed to mention that the Post Office Volunteers, the East Kent Regt., the 1st Cinque Ports Artillery, and the Yeomanry Cavalry did well. I also noticed the great diversity in the wearing of accoutrements. Havresacks and water-bottles were variously disposed about the person of their wearers. More uniformity of dress would greatly conduce to the appearance of our citizen soldiers. More power to them!"

The British and Foreign Fresh Meat Company, Limited, has been formed, with a capital of £100,000, to develope the process discovered by Mr. Richard Jones, of Berkeley, Gloucester, for facilitating the home and foreign trade in fresh meat. Richard Jones' patent process permits an unlimited importation of fresh meat in carcase. It requires no special packing, no refrigerators or ice, and no expensive machinery or air-tight chambers on shipboard. The cost of plant for slaughtering 500 sheep a day by Richard Jones's process would not amount to £50; thus, no capital will be sunk in expensive refrigerating machinery, or in building or fitting-up ships for the purpose, but the entire amount will be available for the purchase and transport of meat as ordinary merchandise, thus becoming immediately productive of profits to the Company.

The Admiralty have recently issued new regulations respecting the removal of officers and their families from official residences abroad on being relieved.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

The 1st Division, Royal Engineers (Telegraph Corps), will shortly proceed to Chobham, and there encamp for several weeks for technical instruction.

The Aldershot competitions in connection with the Royal Military Tournament at the Agricultural Hall have been postponed till the 23rd inst. Those who carry off the local prizes will be the only soldiers from the Aldershot Division who will compete at the tournament in London.

The lawn-tennis cricket season opened here on Thursday with a match on the officers' club ground,—the Aldershot Division v. New College, Oxford. Captain T. W. Bennett, R.E., has been appointed divisional captain for the season.

The Divisional Spring Steeplechase Meeting opened yesterday on the North Horns course, and will be continued to-day (Saturday). This year there has been a relaxation of the rule prohibiting officers' mess luncheon-tents at races, and all corps in garrison availed themselves of the permission so kindly granted by Sir Archibald Alison.

The officers, non-commissioned officers, and gunners of C Battery, B Brigade, R.H.A., and H Battery, 1st Brigade, R.A., will proceed to-day to Shoeburyness for gun practice.

Five officers and 140 non-commissioned officers and men of the 2nd Coldstream Guards will arrive at Pirbright from Windsor to-day, and there encamp for musketry instruction.

Not having the fear of Lord Archibald Campbell before his eyes, a gallant officer—who, if not a Scot is nothing, and who might intone "Scots wha hae" in the vernacular—by right of descent has sent us the following, which we print, in anticipation of a hurricane from the North:—

TARTAN FEVER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—Newspapers and reviews have of late been teeming with warning, reproof, and sarcasm as to the dressing of the Briton generally in the once clannish tartan, for Manchester and Co., Birmingham and Co., and London at large, furnish more Highlanders and "Scotsmen" by three times to the tartaned regiments than the length and breadth of Scotland can possibly supply. Some years since the following regiments only had the right to be filled in Scotland,—viz., 42nd, 71st, 72nd, 74th, 78th, 79th, 92nd, and 93rd, thus showing eight battalions which were, with much exertion, maintained as national. Nine more have now been tartanised, of course bidding in the field for recruiting against the old eight. It is well that this truly ridiculous farce should be thoroughly understood, whoever were the learned discoverers of this jumble. But this is one among many others. Proteus in the pantomime could hardly be excelled in such changes.—I am, &c., A Chameleon.

"FEATHER BONNET AND KILT."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—The writer of the military article in the Quarterly winds up his general attack on things as they are by an attack on the Highland dress and on the feather-bonnet, and asks us if we have watched a Highland regiment advancing against a head wind, when even the chin-strap is not sufficient often to prevent some of the bonnets being carried off by rude Boreas. How about the modern helmet, I would ask him? Has he watched a regiment in a head wind or in a dead calm lying down and endeavouring to shoot? If so, he would know that this much-belauded head-gear is so ill-adapted to modern warfare, or even a sham-fight, that when the men lie down the back part of the helmet goes into the nape of the neck, and the helmet must get displaced at once, and gets cocked over the soldier's nose, or else tumbles off altogether. The writer would not find the feather-bonnet so great an inconvenience. The moral of this is that he need not preach the abolition of the feather-bonnet when a much more ridiculous head-gear is in daily and hourly use. As to his attack on the kilt, my reply is that the kilt is never absurd, or uncomfortable, or barbarous when sufficient cloth is allowed the men. As matters now stand, owing to the ludicrous stinting of the Clothing Department, the kilt is barbarous, for these bright lights dole out to full-grown men only sufficient material, tartan, to clothe a boy. My boy, aged 13, could dress on the Government allowance, but no grown-up man can. Let the Highland soldier be properly clothed in accordance with the amount of cloth needful, and which amount is known to all Highland or Scottish officers, and the kilt becomes a comfortable dress. We ask this in justice to the men and the dress.—I am, &c.,

Archibald Campbell.

We are given to understand that the following are the official terms of reference as to the subjects to be investigated by the committee appointed by the Admiralty, under the presidency of the Earl of Ravensworth, called the Government Dockyard Committee, viz.:—"To inquire into the conditions under which contracts are invited for the building or repairing of ships, including their engines, for her Majesty's Navy; and into the mode in which repairs and refits of ships are effected in her Majesty's Dockyards."

On Monday evening, Capt. Canada, Capt. Durrant, arrived at Bermuda on April 23 from Antigua.

Constance, Capt. Doughty, arrived at Esquimault on April 29.

Crocodile, Capt. Carr, arrived at Spithead on Tuesday morning, flying the "Yellow Jack." She remained in quarantine until she had been boarded by the Health Officer, and went into harbour on Wednesday morning to disembark her troops. From the statements of the medical officers on board, it appears that choleraic symptoms manifested themselves among the passengers almost immediately after leaving Bombay. Previous to sailing, a serjt.-major died on board, and the body was taken on shore for burial. The cause of death was stated to be diarrhœa. After the ship had been only four days at sea—namely, on the 8th ult.—Pte. Sullivan, of the 2nd South Wales Borderers, succumbed to an attack of virulent Asiatic cholera, dying in two hours. Pte. Ellis, of the same battalion, died on the 18th; Lance-Corpl. Hughes, 1st Leinster Regt., on the 24th; and Pte. Henry, of the A.H.C., who caught the infection while attending upon the sick; Gunner Weymouth, Q Baty. 1st Brig., R.A.; and Pte. J. Reed, 2nd South Wales Borderers, were also attacked, and died on the 20th from supervening fever. Of the six fatal cases, three belonged to the Welsh Borderers. Pte. Minihan, also of the Borderers, and Pte. Elkins, 2nd Hampshire Regt., were also among the sufferers, but made satisfactory progress towards convalescence during the voyage, and were transferred to the quarantine ship at the Motherbank on the Crocodile arriving at Spithead. As soon as the real character of the epidemic had been discovered, Brig.-Surg. Rudd, Surgs.-Major Scott, Hedge, and Galloway, after consultation with Capt. Carr, took the most vigorous precautionary measures to arrest and stamp out the disease. The victims were isolated, disinfectants were brought into use, clothes were destroyed, and the women's quarters fumigated. Supplementary hospitals were also improvised, and on the arrival of the ship at Malta some nurses were received on board. The result was that after leaving the Canal the condition on board visibly improved. Among others who died during the voyage, but not from cholera, were Pte. Green, Royal Scots Fusiliers; Pte. Conn, East Surrey Regt.; Pte. Smith, Connaught Rangers; the wife of Lieut. Spence, Bombay S.C.; and four children.

Woodlark, Com. Kingscote, arrived at Aden on April 30.

Alterations are being made in the rear of the Royal Marine Barracks at Stonehouse, for the convenience of the Great Western Railway and Dock Company, an arrangement having been made with the Admiralty on the give-and-take principle, the cost to be borne by the Company. A great portion of the rear wall is now down, the Dock Company encroaching on the barrack-ground at one angle, and giving a similar piece further on. In matter of utility of the ground, however, the barracks will be the loser, as a portion of the officers' recreation-ground is cut off, while the piece gained only widens a road that was before quite sufficient for all purposes required.

THE NAVAL BRIGADE IN THE SOUDAN.

ADMIRALTY, April 29, 1884.

A despatch, from which the following is an extract, has been received from Rear-Admiral Sir N. W. Hewett, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., V.C., Commander-in-Chief of her Majesty's ships and vessels on the East Indies station, enclosing a report, a copy of which is appended, from Major-Gen. Sir Gerald Graham, K.C.B., V.C., on the services rendered by the Naval Brigade during the operations connected with the action of Tamai on March 13, 1884:—

Extract from Despatch, dated April 2, 1884, from Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., V.C.:—"On March 11, at the request of the General Officer Commanding, I landed a Naval Brigade, similar in strength to that which had been attached to the force for the relief of Tokar. I beg to enclose, for the information of their Lordships, a copy of Gen. Graham's report on the services which Com. Ernest Rolfe, the officers, and men of this brigade rendered."

"From Major-Gen. Sir Gerald Graham, K.C.B., V.C., Commanding Expeditionary Force, to Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., V.C., Commander-in-Chief, East Indies station. Suakim, March 30, 1884. Sir,—On March 3 I had the honour of reporting to you on the conduct of the Naval Brigade under Com. Rolfe, R.N., during the operations connected with the relief of Tokar; I now beg to forward a report from Com. Rolfe, dated March 16, 1884, on the proceedings of the Naval Brigade, during the operations connected with the action of Tamai on March 13. Here, as at El Teb, the Naval Brigade displayed the utmost gallantry, and I deeply regret their heavy loss during the temporary check to the advance of the 2nd Brigade. It is a significant proof of the coolness and gallantry of the officers and men of the Naval Brigade, that during all the heat and excitement of the enemy's desperate charge, when three officers and seven men were killed beside their guns, not one of these guns was allowed to fall into the enemy's hands before it had been secured by the safety-key from being turned against us. The machine-guns did excellent service both before and after this temporary reverse. As in the previous operations, I cannot too highly praise the endurance and discipline shown by the men when toiling with their guns under a burning sun over heavy ground, or when under fire, in bivouac, or in action. I must again bring to your notice the coolness in action, readiness and power of command shown by Com. Rolfe, R.N., and he specially mentions Lieut. Graham, R.N., Mr. Edward Tyndale Biscoe, and Mr. Edward Hyde Hewett, midshipmen, of the Euryalus, also the Rev. Mr. Todd and Dr. Gimlette. As the military operations are now concluded, I must beg to express my thanks and those of the force under my command, to you, Sir, for your unvarying courtesy and readiness to meet all our requirements, and to express my opinion that the success of the expedition has been very materially furthered by your personal influence. I have also to express my thanks for the untiring zeal and devotion with which the Naval officers and men have worked day and night when required at embarking and disembarking troops and stores. I may also be allowed to express my admiration at the skill and ability displayed by those in authority in organising the transport arrangements, and in the difficult tasks of embarking and disembarking numbers of riding horses and transport animals, besides troops and stores. In all this trying work the Naval and Military officers employed have, I am happy to say, worked together in perfect harmony, having one object in common, the furtherance of the expedition. The duties of embarking and disembarking were most efficiently carried out by Capt. Andoe, of her Majesty's ship Orontes, in conjunction with Lieut.-Col. Gordon, Deputy-Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen., and with the following officers under him:—Lieuts. W. D. Morrish and A. H. Oliver, of the Jumna; Lieuts. C. S. Elliot and H. H. Barnard, of the Orontes; Lieut. John A. Colwell, of the Ranger; Lieuts. H. M. Heathcote and A. J. Pocklington, late of the Dryad. For a short time before the arrival of Capt. Andoe from Trinkitat, the disembarkation at Suakim was in charge of Com. Rolfe, who was as efficient and thorough in discharge of those duties as when commanding the Naval Brigade. The arrangements for condensing and storage of water were under charge of Mr. Crook, chief engineer of her Majesty's ship Euryalus, and to the skill and care shown by that officer I attribute the fact that the supply at the base was always ample for all requirements. Mr. Crook was associated with a military officer, generally Major Wood, R.E., and was assisted by a Naval officer, at Trinkitat, by Lieut. Broadley, her Majesty's ship Jumna, and at Suakim, by Lieut. and Com. Bigge, her Majesty's ship Decoy.—I have, &c., G. Graham, Major-General, Commanding Expeditionary Force."

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS, Etc.

⁂ The General Officer whose name and services are familiar to us, writing in regard to recent occurrences, is informed that it is thought best to let the subject drop for the present, although we quite agree with him in the estimate he has formed of the consequences and nature of the acts to which he has called attention.

C. S. (1st Batn. R. S. F.)—We regret to say it is impossible to give such details. Just imagine every battalion in the service asking for equal space!

Retired Quartermaster.—We do not consider the "grievance" one which it would do the body any benefit to put forward just at present.

X.—We do not approve of your suggestion, if it be meant in earnest. The affection of which you speak certainly was not demonstrative on the part of one of those you name at all events. All contemporary authority shows that it was never intended to make a duplicate of the Commendatore's statue in "Don Giovanni" of the Duke's brazen image; but the question may now be considered as settled. The old one goes, not to pot, but to Aldershot; the new one to Hyde Park Corner or Waterloo Place.

Many interesting communications, reviews and letters, &c., are unavoidably omitted, owing to want of space, this week.

Army & Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 3, 1884.

ON MAY-DAY, Russia celebrated the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the existence of her Corps of Naval Artillery, it being exactly a century and a half ago that Anna Joanovna issued a Ukase which practically created this branch of the Military service. The first Naval Artillerymen in Russia were chosen from the Preobrajensky Regiment, and we first find them in history taking part in the campaign against Azof in 1696. In the year 1714, Peter the Great founded a Naval Artillery School, to which only the children of nobles were admitted. After the death of Peter, when this branch of the service was beginning to fall into decadence, it was revived by the formation of a separate corps, the duty of whose chief it was to look after the arming of vessels and see that the various arsenals had their full quantity of stores. This officer also had charge of the cannon factories, and in time of war disposed of the Naval forces, also arranging the defence of any fortresses that might be attacked. The ordinary strength of this Naval Artillery Corps was 67 officers and 2,043 men. In the year 1757 the corps was transformed into a single artillery corps, with a strength of 179 officers and 2,200 men. Its subsequent progress was so great, that in the year 1810 it consisted of 330 officers and 6,000 men, and had to be divided into brigades, four of which were apportioned to the Baltic and two to the Black Sea Fleet. In 1830 it was again changed into a Naval Artillery Corps, its direction being assigned to an Inspector of Artillery. The body then consisted of two divisions. The line division consisted of six brigades (eight companies to a brigade); the harbour division was formed of "arsenal" companies. In 1846 the rank and file of the corps were employed to complete the equipment of the Fleet, and this arrangement has been continued up to the present time. The "arsenal" companies, transformed into artillery companies, existed up to 1863; on disbandment, their places were taken by men who offered their services under a system of voluntary enlistment. Even at this moment the corps is by no means to be regarded as having reached its final stage of development. Recently there have been many rumours of coming change. It may be remembered that at the beginning the corps was filled up by the entrance of cadets who had completed their course of training in the School of Artillery. This arrangement was continued up to the year 1752, that is to say, until the formation of a corps in which the sons of the nobility were enlisted. From this corps were drafted every year from thirty to sixty men into the Naval Artillery Corps. In 1827 a school of instruction was opened whence Artillery officers were taken from 1849 to 1856, in which latter year a more pretentious educational establishment was called into existence, but only for a period of three years. Since 1871 a few men are taken every year for service in the Naval Artillery from the Technical School of the Marine Department, an establishment which turns out annually about fifty pupils. For the service of the Black Sea Fleet in 1786, there was opened an artillery school at Nikolaeff, and this existed for a period of forty years. At the present time, the Naval Artillery Corps is recruited solely from the pupils of the School of Artillery. It consists of officers (about 200), under-officers, and captains of guns. The preparation of under-officers and captains of guns is secured by a course of instruction lasting two years, eight months of which must be spent afloat. Those captains of guns who come out best in the examinations remain a year longer, with a view to qualifying for positions as under-officers. In the Technical School of the Marine Department, the course lasts four years, the winters being spent within doors and the summers afloat.

"And saying, 'I will ne'er consent,'—consented." We are going on the road farther and farther, willy-nilly! From Alexandria to Kafr Dowar, from Alexandria to Port Said, to Ismailia, to Tel-el-Kebir, our troops went to Cairo! Again, from Cairo to Suez, to Suakim, to Tamasi and back to Cairo again (with a divergence to Massowah). Again, Gordon, from Cairo to Korosko, then to Abou Hamed, then to Khartoum,—but not to stay! No! Only to go there, and come back again. But that apparently is not to be done without help, and so on we march again to Khartoum to get him out, when and how it is not yet quite decided. But the "when" is to be very, very soon, no matter what the "how" may be. And when the expedition reaches Khartoum, it may safely be predicted that it will not leave in a hurry. There is a deal to be done there. There is El Obeid to be arranged, and there is the Mahdi to be done for, and then there will be settlements to be made and arrangements consummated, and the Equatorial regions regulated, and constitutions and parliamentary government introduced,—in fact, a large area of work and responsibility open to us on account of Arabi and the Suez Canal. To be brief. The Government are now engaged in settling the details of an expedition to Khartoum. There may be no necessity for sending it, but that there will be an expedition should Gordon be cut off and placed in jeopardy, may be taken as quite certain. Why the Government do not admit what they are preparing to do is a secret into the reasons of which we cannot penetrate.

The Committee of the House of Commons under the presidency of Colonel Stanley commenced its sittings on Thursday, to investigate the faults and failures of the Supply and Transport Services during the Egyptian Campaign of 1882. We have always maintained that the change in the administration of the service brought about the division of duties and responsibilities between the Commissary-General at Head-quarters and the Civilian Directors was incompatible with good results; and if the numerous proofs of ignorance, want of forethought, and apparent indifference to the welfare and health of the troops which this inquiry is likely to bring to light, induces the superior authorities at the War Office to set their house in order, the Committee obtained by Dr. Cameron will do good service to the country. That the present Directors ever succeeded in obtaining their appointments, for which they were in no way fitted by training or experience, has always filled us with wonder; but it is a still greater wonder that such an arrangement as that which has for years existed in the organisation of one of the most important of the administrative services has not long ago brought about the most serious disaster. We hope when the present inquiry has proved, as it of course must do, the truth of the statement with respect to the failure of the Transport and Supply Services in Egypt, it will carry its investigations further,—i.e., into the very heart of the organisation which is a standing source of danger.

Sir G. Graham, who paid his respects to the Duke of Cambridge and visited his old friends at the Horse Guards and War Office yesterday, seems somewhat worn, and in need of his well-deserved holiday. It is said to be possible he will not return to Egypt on the expiration of his leave.

Major-General the Hon. P. Feilding, whose departure from Malta was, we hear, much regretted by all classes, British and native, arrived in London this week.

Major-General Fraser has been trying some experimental drills with Cavalry since he took over his command at Aldershot.

What are called the "revelations" before the Egyptian Transport Committee—for getting which Dr. Cameron deserves the thanks of soldiers and taxpayers—are really only official and uncontradictable evidences of the truth of statements made by newspaper correspondents and officially denied—repetitions of the same old, old story. War is expensive, but conducted by War-Office civilians it is profligately, ruinously wasteful; and whenever we have a declaration of hostilities, the first thing our authorities do is to flood the world either with a sort of banditti who divide the spoil with knowing contractors, or with ignorant amateur purchasers, equally costly to the country. The smug gentlemen of the Treasury who are supposed to save the public and guard the national purse are never heard of on such occasions; but if there be any question of expenditure for the good of the service, "my Lords" stand with levelled steel pens in unbroken square to resist it.

We believe that steps are in contemplation among his old friends to give Baker Pasha a welcome home on his arrival in this country. Although not inclined to look with hopefulness at the unauthorised agencies which have been busied in getting up petitions and the like, we think that the more substantial movement of which we have heard may carry some weight with it.

A great number of officers have given in their names, we understand, in the hope that there may be some demand for their services in North Africa. The War Office have been asking for information to be supplied by the Intelligence Department; and there is just a likelihood that some plan is already sketched out to repeat the Abyssinian Expedition.

Colonel Williams (generally called "Ben"), Director of the Army Remounts for India, has been appointed by the Government of India to visit Australia and the Colonies, in order to inquire into the prospects of a present and future supply of horses for India, and to enter into communication with the principal breeders, for the mutual advantage of the Imperial and Colonial services.

Mr. Justice Scott, in a sketch of General Gordon's life, contributed to an Indian paper, says that a letter describing the departure of the General from London for Khartoum declared:—"Earl Granville carried his dressing-bag, the Duke of Cambridge got his ticket, and Lord Hartington held the door as he got into the train!" We believe there would be even more enthusiasm evinced in getting him back again, that Mr. Gladstone would hold the door to let him out, Lord Granville run off to get a cab, and the Duke of Cambridge carry his bag and umbrella!

Colonel Sir Owen Lanyon, who has been on a four months' tour in America, has resumed his duties as Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General, Southern District, much improved in health.

The Pall Mall Gazette has done for itself! It might have had a letter an evening from Admiral of the Fleet Sir T. Symonds—for many a long year we hope to come!—but having received a comparison in tabular form from the worthy Admiral between the British Estimates for 1884 and the French Budget des dépenses for 1884, what does the editor do but calmly destroy his chances of future correspondence, by venturing to treat the Admiral's sacred statistics disrespectfully. "Omitting," says the bold, bad man, "Admiral Symonds' details, which are of more interest to professional than general readers, we," &c. There, the deed is done.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

COUGHS,
COLDS,
ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.
Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See the Times, July 13th, 1864.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the true Palliative in

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC for CHOLERA, DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of Diarrhœa."

From SYMES and CO., Simla:
Dear Sir,—We congratulate you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, his Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.
The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations. Of all Chemists, 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, and 4s 6d.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

THIS Com[illegible] been formed to develope the process discovered by Mr. Richard Jones, of [illegible], Gloucester, for facilitating the home and foreign trade in fresh meat.

Whilst the meat-consuming population of this country is rapidly increasing, the number of our cattle (owing to losses from imported disease), remains stationary, and our sheep have positively decreased by nearly 4,000,000 head since 1876. The household question, What can be done to cheapen fresh meat? is universal.

"The remedy for foot and mouth disease could be summed up in two words—dead meat."—Vide DUKE of RICHMOND's speech at Chichester, December 6.

"Meat, to almost any extent, can be imported dead quite as well, and in many cases better, than it can alive."—Mr. HENRY CHAPLIN, M.P.'s letter to the Times, January 14, 1884.

Richard Jones's process requires no special packing, no refrigerators or ice, and no expensive machinery or air-tight chambers on shipboard.

The operation is simple, the result certain, and the cost trifling.

A. Meat so treated retains all its juiciness and flavour.
B. It becomes extremely tender.
C. A joint can be cut off, and the rest of the carcase left to hang.
D. It has been kept in an ordinary room (not a larder) in London for five months without showing any decomposition.
E. It does not become tainted in hot weather after being cooked.
F. The expense for sheep will not exceed 3d, and for oxen 2s 6d per head.

The cost of plant for slaughtering 500 sheep a day would not amount to £50; thus, no capital will be sunk in expensive refrigerating machinery, or in building or fitting-up ships for the purpose.

The apparatus is so simple and portable, that a number of slaughtering stations can be established and worked simultaneously wherever supplies are found most available and transport advantageous, while upon exhaustion of supplies at any one station it can at once be removed to fresh centres, without any delay or loss for sacrifice of fixtures.

Great Britain consumes annually 600,000 tons more meat than she produces. From Russia and Hungary indefinitely large quantities can be obtained. The Directors propose to commence their work there, and gradually to extend their operations to more distant countries. From the reports and quotations that have been laid before them, they confidently believe that meat can be landed in England at from 4½d to 5d per lb. Let the public compare this price with the Metropolitan Market quotations. Large dividends ought, therefore, to be certainly earned.

It is of special importance to remark that Meat imported under this process can be kept over from market to market. The trade for fresh meat being conducted on cash terms, all risk of bad debts is avoided.

The owners of the patents, being fully satisfied of the value of the invention, are willing to base their remuneration entirely upon the success of the Company, the consideration being in Shares only.

The contracts are between Richard Jones, John Harger, and W. L. Strong, dated August 15, 1882; between John Harger and Edward Sands Gaisford, August 22, 1882; between W. L. Strong, and E. S. Tudor, John Silva, A. J. Shore, F. F. Powell, and O. W. Papineau, June 9, 1883, and April 29, 1884; and between R. Jones, J. Harger, E. S. Gaisford, and W. L. Strong and Morris Boyton, on behalf of the Company, dated April 30, 1884.

Attention is specially directed to letters and certificates from Dr. Bond, Henry Chaplin, Esq., M.P., Mr. W. Hunting, F.R.C.V.S., Messrs. Hicks, and Professor Wanklyn, M.R.C.S., which, with prospectuses, can be had from the Bankers, Broker, Solicitors, and Offices of the Company.

NORDENFELT ON MACHINE-GUNS.*

INTO the heat and smoke of the battle which has been raging at home and abroad between the inventors, adapters, patentees, or pirates of machine-guns, we have not ventured, feeling assured that in the end the best gun would win; nor did we at any time adopt either the sanguine views and exaggerated claims of the apostles of the machine-gun faith who saw in them rivals to or substitutes for field artillery, or the prejudiced opinions of the service fogies who considered machine-guns as very useless innovations. The battle, indeed, still goes on, but with diminished intensity. In some parts of the field victory has declared itself on the side of one or other of the combatants,—Hotchkiss is the favourite in the United States, and perhaps Russia. Germany has not pronounced, and affects impartial distrust. France is undecided; and England has adopted or used Gatlings, Gardners, and Nordenfelts tentatively for Naval service. But a general admission has been made that machine-guns are very powerful and indispensable accessories in Naval warfare, and that there is an obvious if ill-defined future opening on them as portions of the armament of military forces and positions. The handsome, well-printed and papered volume before us—which is illustrated by 57 full-page illustrations—contains not only a complete catalogue of all the natures o the Nordenfelt system, with tables of competitive trials, but what we may call a treatise on Nordenfelt and machine-gun warfare, clearly expressed, well reasoned, and judicially worked out in elaborate chapters. It will be consistent with our previous course if we refrain from making any attempt to analyse the copious comparisons between the Nordenfelt and the rival Gatling, Hotchkiss, and Gardner guns, and content ourselves with recording the facts, according to these tables, that the Nordenfelt is on every point of war the best machine-gun as yet in existence. Mr. Thorsten Nordenfelt, in his preface, tells us that when he began to write the book, it was his intention to endeavour to give an unbiassed opinion on machine-guns. But nature was too strong for him. He soon found it impossible to avoid comparisons, and he therefore thought it better to give his own views, "sans peur et sans reproche," and to leave it to others to judge how far his ideas are right or wrong. It is truly a very comprehensive account of every sort of the developed Palmcrantz mitrailleuse to which Mr. Nordenfelt, by his energy, skill, enterprise, and incessant application of time, thought, and money, has acquired the right of giving his own name. Fully aware of the damage done by injudicious pretensions, Mr. Nordenfelt disclaims over and over again any idea that machine-guns can be the rivals to, or substitutes for, field artillery, and treats them as supplements to make good deficiencies in infantry strength; and it is in his ingenious illustrations of the uses of his guns for military purposes—in which must be recognised the hand of skilled, practical soldiers, or of an untrained natural genius for warfare—the most interesting portion of his work will be found; for the advantages and merits of machine-guns for Naval purposes can scarcely be contested, we imagine, though Mr. Nordenfelt does not even on that score take anything for granted. Mr. Nordenfelt very properly remarks that a great difference of opinion exists as to the exact tactical position of rifle-calibre machine-guns in the field, owing principally to the want of practical experience, and also to the imperfection of the guns hitherto used. In the twelfth chapter of his work, the author enters shortly, but still explicitly, into the action, as he supposes it to be, of his gun employed indirectly in batteries, in defensive and offensive tactics, with advanced guards, rear guards, and outposts, for the protection of convoys, and the like, with special reference to its uses on a galloping-carriage, an imperfect but ingenious sort of which was improvised by Lord Charles Beresford, when he was busily engaged in devising schemes for the annihilation of the hosts of Bedouins not always visible to the naked eye, but supposed to be hovering outside his posts on the shore at Alexandria. These suggestions, as we may call them, are rendered plain by the excellent illustrations which accompany the letterpress. It is sufficient for the purposes of this notice to express an opinion that many of the suggestions seem to be most valuable, that nearly all are practicable, and that they undoubtedly demand the attention of the military authorities, who are dealing with an Army the infantry of which is called upon to perform duties, often very unexpectedly, in numbers not adequate, according to the foreign standard, for the objects to be carried out. And especially does Mr. Nordenfelt make a good point in the section wherein he indicates the uses of such guns as the five-barrelled machine-gun against uncivilised enemies. It would appear, however, that Gatlings at all events are not safe from the attack of resolute savages, who do not mind being killed. There is in the portability of this weapon special inducements to the commanders of expeditions in hilly or difficult countries to supplement their field artillery by a liberal provision of machine-guns, which, in certain cases, indeed, might be available, as the sole artillery needed with the troops. But Mr. Nordenfelt is too sagacious, and indeed, practical, to propose that his system of guns is to be anything but supplementary in the operations of war, claiming for them, however, for the defence especially of field works, whether permanent or temporary, advantages not easily denied. It is well known that Lord Wolseley, with some others of the advanced school, attach the very highest importance to the use of the machine-gun artillery, and that visions of victory float before their minds when they think of pumping lead from concentrated batteries of these terrible engines upon an astonished lead-coated enemy. But there is always, as yet, this objection to the rifle-calibre machine-gun in the field, its effective range maximum is 1,200 yards; and it must, therefore, be, in the face of a moderate artillery, exposed to destruction, unless it be hidden; and the officer who has to command machine-guns, to use them successfully, will need to be a master in the art of sneaking and of dodging into position, and of making good use of the inequalities of the ground in such a situation in which he will be enabled to steal upon the enemy without being exposed in his advance, or when in action, to the direct fire of artillery 1,500 or 2,000 yards away. We must compliment Mr. Nordenfelt on the exceeding ingenuity with which he puts forward every point that can be established, first in favour of machine-guns generally, and secondly, and above all, in respect to the superiority of his own system over all others. None are more alive than Naval officers to the vital importance of machine-gun armaments, and we believe that even the most bigoted Artillery officer—if it is possible to conceive the existence of such a military person, considering the course of enlightened instruction which prevails at Woolwich and amongst the scientific branches of the service—must admit that there is a great future for the machine-gun in actual warfare, and that it will be a discreditable negligence, perhaps ending in some very serious disaster, if, while we have the opportunity in these "piping times of peace," undisturbed by any greater demands upon our resources than the equipment of predatory expeditions, the whole question connected with the uses of this armament is not thoroughly worked out, and the means given, if the result of experiment be satisfactory, to every commander who may be placed in charge of a division of the British Army in warfare, to use with the fullest effect weapons which are demonstrated to possess such formidable properties as may, without exaggeration, be claimed for machine-guns.

Reviews.

The author of the very smart, pleasant, and readable little book, Khedives and Pashas, noticed some short time ago in our columns, writes to say that he is prepared to substantiate the truth of every anecdote in it, and that he has the best authority for the statement that the ex-Khedive caused the Moufettish to be murdered,—the words are that he "ordered the disappearance" of that official. We are bound to accept such positive declarations, and must believe that there was foundation for statements which our reviewer was inclined to question, and as to some of which he was quite incredulous. But our correspondent does not call on us to abandon the exercise of the right of judgment in regard to taste; and admitting the cleverness and accuracy of most of the sketches, we think that our reviewer's criticism was not erroneous in some respects, and that the author of the fascicule has been more brilliant than just in some of his judgments. But, "de gustibus," &c.

In the Nineteenth Century there is an exceedingly interesting paper upon the forthcoming race between Arab horses at Newmarket, by Mr. Blunt, who has given close attention to the various races of Arabs, and writes about them with zeal and clearness; but he will not convince English racing men, who remember the deliberate and weighty opinion of Admiral Rous, that the Nestor of the turf was wrong when he declared "a British racer could give four stone to the best Arab ever foaled." But the most interesting paper, from a service point of view, is that by Sir Henry Parkes, upon Australia and the Imperial connection. He sees "breakers ahead, and it is because of his love for England that he endeavours to point them out." Justice is done to the labour of love worked out by Major Maurice in the life of his eminent father; Sir Thomas Brassey has found time, amidst all his varied occupations as a Member of Parliament and Lord of the Admiralty, to give us an interesting account of the last voyage of the Sunbeam to the West-India Islands and the ports of the Southern States and back again. Mr. S. Keay continues his indictment against the Government, or as he calls it, "spoliation of India," and certainly makes out a strong case. But who is to give judgment in it in favour of the plaintiff?

Among the papers in Colborn's United Service Magazine which are worthy of notice we must name, in the first place, the interesting novel by Mr. James Grant. "Colville of the Guards" promises well, though the gallant young officer of that name who may claim the appellation without fiction may not like being made the hero of a novel, even by Mr. James Grant. That gentleman has worked so long, laboriously, and well in the effort to elevate the tone of the people in respect to the Military profession, that he deserves some recognition; and no one can doubt but that, among our novelists, he is the author to whose writings we may no doubt attribute the choice, by many a gallant lad, of the profession of arms. Captain O'Callaghan contributes an interesting paper on Marlborough's first victory at Walcourt, and suggests that those regiments which distinguished themselves in that action—the Coldstreams, Royal Scots, 16th, 2nd Life Guards, Royal Horse Guards—should have the privilege of bearing the name upon their colours and standards. In a paper on the "Government of the Navy," Mr. Miller calls attention to a phase of the Admiralty organisation which it is just as well we should not lose sight of at the present moment, when there is a hankering after a Lord High Admiral. He quotes the opinion of Sir James Graham before a Select Court in 1861 that, "having seen the experiment of a Lord High Admiral, a Prince of the Blood, with a Council, at work, he was satisfied it was so bad that it ought not to be thought of." In Sir James's words—"It worked so ill, that in the course of eighteen months it came to a deadlock; and the Duke of Wellington, no bad judge, and no bad administrator, was forced to abolish the office, and to revive the Board in its present form." Colonel Knollys concludes his paper on the need of Military reorganisation, in which are set forth arguments familiar to us for the last ten years, with many of which we agree; but we cannot approve of his suggestion that we might use Indian troops to reinforce our Mediterranean, Mauritius, and South-African garrisons, especially Afghans and Beloochees; not that we doubt their efficiency, but that we question the policy which would call them to our Imperial garrisons. But when Colonel Knollys goes further, and declares that Indian troops would be well suited for a campaign in the Russian provinces, on the shores of the Black Sea, or in the Turkish Empire, we are obliged to consider that he does not speak with experience. No one who knows what the Turks are capable of as soldiers, would hold with Colonel Knollys that the Sepoy or Sowar is equal to the Turk, or that an Indian army would be capable of holding its own against Russians. Similarly, when he says the Indian Irregular Cavalry are superior to the Cossacks, Colonel Knollys is writing wildly. The Cossack of the Russian Army is now a regular soldier, exceedingly well equipped, and admirably officered. Recent and close observers do not agree with the writer, that in case of a war in which England was fighting for purely European and British interests, the Australian colonies would contribute very largely to our assistance.

FOREIGN MILITARY LITERATURE.

"Lennart Torstenson" is the title of a series of highly interesting papers, running through several numbers of the Jahrbücher, by Captain von Kaltenborn. The great Swedish General showed when a youth, and a page in the service of Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden, what stuff he was made of. During the siege of Riga (1621), the King sent young Torstenson with an important order to a Colonel. Arrived at his destination, the page saw at a glance, from the dispositions of the enemy, that the King had made a mistake, and altered the verbal order he had to leave accordingly. Full of chagrin, the King, who had meanwhile discoverd his error, received the page, telling him to get ready at once to take the altered order. How great was the King's astonishment when he was told what his messenger had done. The precocious youth followed his King as Captain to Germany; was taken prisoner at the assault on Wallenstein's camp at Nürnberg, kept close prisoner for six months at Ingolstadt, by Maximilian of Bavaria, but finally exchanged at the instance of Wallenstein himself. After Bauer's death, Torstenson received the command of the Swedish Army in Germany (1641), defeated in 1642 Archduke Leopold Wilhelm at Breitenfeld, as well as, in 1645, General Hatzfeld at Jankowitz. General Torstenson's operations are fully described in the series of papers, and throw a vivid light on that portion of the Thirty Years' War. The essay by the well-known German military writer, Captain Thilo von Trotha, on General Gourko's Trans-Balkan campaign in July, 1877, is a critical study of the operations which led to the temporary occupation of some districts south of the Balkans, but a result of which was to secure the Shipka Pass. "The Fortifications of Switzerland, Denmark, Scandinavia, Great Britain, the Balkan Peninsula, and Spain," is the subject of a paper, by Lieutenant Obermair. The experiences of the campaign of 1870-71 gave an impulse to military reorganisation schemes in the countries of Europe, but they also directed attention to the state of their defences. The author describes and reviews what has been done since that memorable year in the countries named. The anonymous writer appears to be well informed in the matter of fortifications in this country. "The Battle of Port Said" is a German translation of the well-known series of articles which appeared in Engineering. In "The French Tonquin Expedition" the movements of the French in the Delta, with which we are fully acquainted, are given up to the end of 1883.

Militär-Wochenblatt—(Supplement). — Captain A. Zimmerman did not live to see the publication of this second portion of his critical enquiry into the military correspondence of Frederick the Great, which gives us an insight into the origin of the campaign of 1757, and its execution up to the concentration of the Prussian army before Prague.

Organ der Militär-Wissenschaftlichen Vereine (Parts I. and II., Vol. 28).—"The Russian Cavalry in their latest Phase of Development, compared with the Austrian." Colonel von Walthoffen is of opinion that the reorganisation and increase which has taken place during the last few years in the Russian cavalry is deserving of the serious attention of other armies, especially those of the neighbours of Russia. The Russian press and even military circles make no secret of the bearing of those reforms, from which great things are expected in future wars. "Egypt" is the title of an exhaustive historical paper by Major J. Debelak, concluding with an account of Arabi's rebellion, and the causes which led to English intervention.

Streffleur's Oesterreichische Militär Zeitschrift is varied and interesting, as usual.

A serious accident occurred at the New Barracks, Southsea, on Monday, by which a number of convicts were seriously injured.

Art.

ROYAL ACADEMY.

We do not share Sir. R. Peel's opinion of the R.A.'s and A.R.A.'s generally, but we think the intelligent foreigner, who is supposed to be a competent critic in all departments of art, might question the taste of the Hanging Committee, at all events. They have "exalted" hors de la ligne some pictures which much better deserved the front row than the indifferent works which are honoured with the pride of place. Our impression, derived from two visits this week, is that the number of inferior works is not very great, but that the average of merit is not very high. There are several—not many, for we might count them on two hands—pictures of very great beauty and excellence; but there is not one that inspires a great emotion, or gives even a "sensation." Pretty conceits and effects are numerous—not one grand canvas,—the tenderest bit, perhaps, being Faed's old Highland crofter and the lassie looking after the departing emigrants; but there are scores of paintings one would like to put on his walls, and hundreds he would gladly see his friends carry away, provided they were put in the coal-cellar. We must defer a detailed notice till next week.

ROYAL INSTITUTE OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.

The second exhibition in the new galleries, Piccadilly, opened last Monday. It cannot be said that the present "show" equals that of last year, but it is nevertheless highly interesting. There are fewer large drawings hung, and consequently there is a considerable increase in the number of works. In the first room the most noteworthy work is by Mr. Walter Langley. The scene is a Cornish village, where an eager crowd has gathered about the village post-office. After a recent storm, the names of the missing boats have been received, and to wives and sweethearts and kindred sad news of loss has come. Mr. Langley has more than maintained his reputation as an accomplished artist by this work. It is full of interest. Mr. Steers' "An Interesting Volume" is of high promise. A young girl is reading to her father, who is sitting smoking by the fire, in evident enjoyment at the story. The draughtsmanship is excellent, and the play of light dexterously managed. Mr. Melville has two clever impressionist sketches of scenes in India. Mr. Wimperis, Mr. A. Severn, and Mr. Carlisle have examples of clever, honest, landscape work. Miss Eley sends a delicately-painted portrait of a girl, and Mr. Wilfrid Ball contributes a clever and bright little sketch. In the centre room, we find a drawing by Mr. Gregory, which he names "A Look at the Model." Mr. Gregory has represented himself sitting by his easel and looking out of the picture. The likeness is perfect, and the drawing admirable. It may safely be said there is nothing in the gallery to surpass this small drawing. Mr. Linton's "Priscilla" is a refined and finished piece of work. Mr. Gore sends a very charming little drawing, entitled "'Listed." A farm labourer wearing the ribbons in his cap is bidding his sweetheart farewell. The girl, whose face is turned away, is sad and heavy-hearted. We see this in her attitude, and her grief is reflected in the half-regretful face of the newly-made recruit. Mr. Dadd has several clever and humorous drawings, notably one entitled "Pigtails and Powder." Mr. Wylie's drawing of an old "liner" being towed away to be broken up is realistic and accurately drawn. He appropriately calls it "The Funeral March of a Hero." "The New Forest," by Mr. Collier, bold and brilliant, is a valuable contribution to the gallery. "Something Wrong," by Mr. Huson, is capital. Mr. A. Parsons sends "In the Midlands," representing a bright, sunny, spring day in the country. The apple trees in full blossom are capitally done. We are sorry that we cannot mention a great number of interesting drawings, but we cannot pass over Mr. Parsons' exceedingly clever "Streamlet," and Mr. Edwin Hayes' fine sea pieces. Mr. Keeley Halswelle's drawings, good as they are, seem not equal to the work he contributed to last year's exhibition. A sketch of an Italian peasant-boy, by Mr. Kennington, is striking and full of promise.

The Duke of Cambridge, accompanied by Lord Wolseley and other officers of the Head-quarters Staff, proceeded to Aldershot for the purpose of making an inspection of the troops. His Royal Highness first visited Cove Common, where he inspected the three regiments of Cavalry and the batteries of Artillery. This concluded, he proceeded to the Queen's Parade, where the Engineer Companies, Infantry Brigades, and Army Hospital Corps were formed up in line of quarter-columns. His Royal Highness made a very narrow inspection. At the close of this inspection, which lasted about half an hour, the troops formed for the march-past. According to the Standard:—"The Royal Engineers marched by with the 1st Brigade, the fine physique of Col. Farrington's command of the Royal Highlanders, who had a muster of over 400, creating a very favourable impression. Col. White's Shropshire Regt. was strong, and looked fit, and it was a treat to note that the smart Scottish Rifles, who have for a long period been considerably under strength, have largely increased their numbers, Col. Hole's command showing the largest number of the brigade, nearly 600. The 2nd Brigade, only two battalions, mustered about 1,200, and looked smart and well-set-up soldiers, albeit there are a good many lads in the ranks, and the Scots Guards, Scots Fusiliers, and a strong muster of nearly 700 of the Rifle Brigade, with the Army Hospital Corps, completed the defile." Subsequently, his Royal Highness lunched with Sir Archibald Alison. The total force inspected was about 6,000 men, with 1,700 horses and 52 guns.

Deputy-Inspector-Gen. F. W. Davis, R.N., of the Royal Naval Hospital, Haslar, was entertained by the officers of the medical mess on Monday evening, at a farewell dinner, prior to his taking up his appointment as Deputy-Inspector-General, in charge of the Royal Naval Hospital at Bermuda.

Service Questions in Parliament.

On Monday the Marquis of Hartington, in answer to Mr. Stansfeld, said that as soon as the state of public business permitted, he proposed to re-introduce the measure which effectually repealed the greater portion of the Contagious Diseases Acts, in substantially the same form as the Bill of last year, with the exception of the clause which provided for compulsory examination in certain circumstances not previously provided for. Sir H. D. Wolff gave notice that he would move the rejection of the Bill.

THE WELLINGTON STATUE.—Mr. S. Lefevre informed Mr. Puleston that in the letter of 1838 the Duke of Wellington offered to show himself on horseback to that gentleman. The head of the statue, however, was taken from a bust of the Duke by Nollekens, who had modelled him at the time of Waterloo. In some important respects the statue did not represent the dress which the duke wore at that battle. The horse Copenhagen died three years before the statue was commenced, and a well-known horse called Recovery was the model. The present duke's opinion was not altered as to what should now be done, and he had renewed his approval of the scheme before the House. No order had yet been given to Mr. Boehm for the statue. As all the facts were before the House, he did not see the necessity for a Committee.

The Marquis of Hartington, in reply to Lord G. Hamilton, said that the Egyptian Government had no control over the British troops in Egypt; but the Egyptian revenues were not chargeable with the whole cost of maintaining all those troops, but only with what was considered to be the excess of what the maintainence of troops in that country cost over and above what they would cost at home.

The Marquis of Hartington informed Mr. W. H. Smith on Monday evening that the Admiralty would make arrangements for a floating barrack for the Marines ordered to garrison Suakim, so that only those officers and men on guard and fatigue duties need be kept on shore, the number of men ashore being regulated according to the necessities of the case. The water supply of Suakim was also discussed. Then the Secretary of State for War was reminded the Egyptian soldiers were now commanded by English officers, and must not be forgotten, as his lordship appeared to have done.

Lord Henry Lennox is to move in the Commons for a Return showing the number of men borne on the Lists of the Royal Naval Reserves on March 31 each year from 1880-81, 1881-82, 1882-83, 1883-84, specifying the numbers belonging to each particular class of the Royal Naval Reserve; also the numbers borne in the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers, and seamen and Marine pensioners on March 31 for the same years. Also, for a Return showing the number, description, and values of the various iron and steel guns supplied by the War Department to the Royal Navy during each of the years 1877-78 to 1883-84 inclusive.

A COURTEOUS CORRECTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The distance of my present quarter, and the length of time necessary to receive and reply to letters, must be my excuse for asking you to allow me to refer to a matter alluded to in your columns some weeks ago. In a leading article you referred to a statement which had appeared in some paper, to the effect that an English officer had been sent from Cairo to Essen, to buy Krupp guns, although there were some hundreds in Egypt. You said that you only allowed it to appear because it had not been contradicted. I can assure you that if those concerned were to undertake the contradiction of all the inaccurate statements with regard to military matters which find their way to England from Cairo, they would have little time for anything else. The facts of the case referred to are briefly as follows:—An English officer was sent to Essen to purchase the 6-centimètre mountain guns for the camel batteries, which are necessary in a country where there are no roads suitable for wheeled artillery. The Krupp guns already in the country were of the old pattern, 8 and 9-centimètre guns,—far too heavy for camels or mules. The gentleman who first made the sage criticism might as well have objected to the purchase of camel guns because there were heavy guns in some of the batteries on the coast.—I am, &c.,

F. DUNCAN,
Colonel Commandant Egyptian Artillery, and Commanding the Troops, Assouan.[*]

Assouan, Egypt, April 10.

[*] [That is something like a style and title for us! Where is the country of which Colonel Duncan speaks, in which there are no roads suitable for wheeled artillery? It is quite true that there are no roads proper for artillery in Egypt, except in the vicinity of Alexandria and Cairo, as the canal banks, used as roads by the people, would not bear wheels, and the bridges, culverts, &c., would give in. But the "desert" is capital travelling ground, and no difficulty has been found in sending artillery with armies in Egypt before the necessity was discovered for the fancy job of buying 6-centimètre guns from Herr Krupp. The mules and camels might be reinforced by asses, and we commend the idea to the Colonel Commandant.—ED. A. & N. G.]

The German Minister of War has invited a prize competition for the best models of new pattern helmet, knapsack, water-bottle, marching boots, and other campaigning articles of equipment.

A correspondent writes:—"If volunteers for Gordon's relief are called for in England, doubtless many an officer of Reserves and others more independent will, if permitted, rush to the rescue. I take it that a most efficient force could in a very short time be collected. Mr. Gladstone may make up his mind upon the fact that his conduct all through with regard to Gordon is condemned by Liberals and Conservatives alike."

ACTIVE SERVICE cannot wear out the teeth that are brushed night and morning with ROWLAND'S ODONTO, the purest and most fragrant dentifrice ever made. All dentists allow that neither washes nor pastes are as efficacious for polishing the teeth and keeping them sound and white as a pure and non-gritty tooth-powder; such ROWLAND'S ODONTO has always proved itself. Ask any dealer in perfumery for ROWLAND'S ODONTO, and avoid spurious imitations, theirs being the only original and genuine Odonto.

ARMY HOSPITAL CORPS.

"Impartiality," writing from the Cape, wants to know who is the commanding officer of the corps. He says:—"We have our officer commanding detachment, our principal medical officer commanding district, and our Director-General, Army Medical Department. The latter makes all promotions, keeps all records, receives returns and reports, and, except that he never sees us, is as much our commanding officer as a regimental colonel. He issues departmental orders, detailing subjects of examination for promotion, and inviting candidates; yet some principal medical officers (though, I believe, without authority) exercise the right of refusing to allow non-commissioned officers and men to undergo examination, and quashing the proceedings when men have been examined, without reference to the Director-General. This has happened where men have been strongly recommended by their detachment commanding officers. If a non-commissioned officer has to wait till all his seniors have passed the examinations, he might as well give up all hope. The Whitehall Yard authorities, of course, never know when a non-commissioned officer has been refused an examination, and so he is "jumped over" by others. A complaint to the commanding officer of one's station is no use, as that officer does not understand departmental machinery. Perhaps someone who has had courage enough to try it can tell me in what legal manner an aggrieved subordinate can communicate with the Director-General, Army Medical Department, commanding Army Hospital Corps."

THE INDIAN COLONELS.

A correspondent says:—"It appears to be considered by Government that depriving Indian Army colonels of their commands will induce them to accept the 32 years' pension. But this pension is so very widely removed from the prospective value of the colonels' allowances, that we cannot congratulate the Government on their chance of success. Moreover, we wish to point out that these officers have met with very heavy disappointment and sudden pecuniary loss, which in many cases will upset the plans and arrangements their previous expectations justified them in making for their families. In short, they have been ruined under, apparently, the cloak of the recommendation of the Army Commission. But it must be recollected that the Army Commission included a bonus in their scheme, and that this important factor has been thrown out. Indeed, we cannot here help remarking that the recommendations of the Commission have been contemptuously ignored throughout; the sole item which has been adopted being the removal of these commanding officers, and that in a manner the Commission did not recommend, and, we venture to say, would not have dreamt of recommending. Government has seized on this one point, unfairly quoting the Army Commission as the authority, but we have yet to see that they will gain their end. Officers so near the colonels' allowance will not accept a pension of so much less value, both in itself and in its excluding the benefits of Lord Clive's Fund. Meantime, the same number of officers are being paid in the regiment, with the addition of the one removed; and we are unable to see any point in the scheme of which we can approve. Could the Government hope to succeed in their aim, we should highly disapprove the action they have taken; but, as we have pointed out, we cannot anticipate that they will even meet with success, until they grant terms commensurate with the prospective value of the colonels' allowance."

THE HYTHE COURSE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Having just completed a course of musketry at Hythe, under the new regulations, I write in order to give any officers who may contemplete going there the benefit of my experience. Every one is aware that the length of the course is now reduced to six weeks; but probably every one is not aware that exactly the same amount of work—which used to occupy two months—has to be got through in that time. In fact, even this is hardly a fair statement of the increased pressure, for, owing to the shorter time now available, more has to be got into each day's outdoor work, thus leaving less time for private study. In my own case, I often found that what with the shooting, drills, &c., to be done, and the loss of time incurred in waiting for my turn to go up for one of the numerous oral examinations which have to be passed, the only time left for study was after dinner, and you may imagine that, after getting up at 7 a.m., and walking about on heavy shingle the greater part of the day, the conditions were rather unfavourable for hard work. By dint of "slaving like a nigger," I managed to do pretty well in the final examination, but a great many did not; and I should strongly advise future aspirants for a "first-class extra" to be thoroughly up in the "firing exercise," "position drill," and "lectures in theoretical principles," before going to the School of Musketry.—I am, &c., F.

LEAP-FROG AT THE ADMIRALTY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Little more than four years have passed since the Admiralty Office experienced one of those periodic spasms called a reorganisation, which by premature retirement inflicted irreparable injury on many deserving public servants. The system of promotion by unmitigated selection was then introduced, and the official who was its strongest advocate was one of the first to profit by it. He was made Assistant-Secretary, the ground being cleared for his advancement by the superannuation of five principal clerks of acknowledged ability, whose pensions are now costing the country nearly £4,000 a year. This gentleman has now to suffer the effect of his own theories,—a clerk many years his junior having been promoted to the superior post of Permanent Secretary, which appointment the Navy naturally expected would, on the retirement of Admiral Tryon, be filled by another Naval officer. It may justly be asked how it comes about that the qualifications which so pre-eminently fitted Mr. Swainson for the post of Assistant-Secretary as to call for the official extinction of all his senior colleagues to enable him to fill it, have not secured for him the higher post now given to one of his juniors; and why, if Mr. MacGregor's merits were so supreme as to justify his present extraordinary advancement, they were not discovered in time to make him Assistant-Secretary, in preference to Mr. Swainson. The Assistant-Secretary owed his advancement to a Conservative Administration; their Liberal successors, it is said, "know not Joseph." What better illustration could be given of the viciousness of the so-called "Playfair" selection system? How deep the sarcasm implied in the name of its author, and how bitter the irony of fate which has made of its chief advocate at the Admiralty so early a victim!—I am, &c., ANOTHER VICTIM.

The Royal Italian Opera season commenced at COVENT GARDEN on Tuesday evening with Poncielli's "La Gioconda," the heroine being impersonated by Madame Marie Durand, who last year so greatly impressed the audience by her pathetic rendering of the part of the self-sacrificing ballad-singer. Mdlle. Tremelli repeated her impersonation of the blind mother of Gioconda, and MM. Marconi, Cotogni, and De Reske resumed their former positions. Mdlle. Laterner, a young and pretty Russian vocalist, ably replaced Mdlle. Stahl as Laura. "Faust" was in the programme for Thursday evening, with Madame Durand as Marguerite; and on this evening (Saturday) "Les Huguenots" is associated with the reappearance of Madame Pauline Lucca as Valentina, and Signor Mierzwinski as Raoul. Signor Bevignani and M. Dupont officiate alternately as the conductors of a carefully-selected orchestra, admirably led by Mr. Carrodus.

At DRURY LANE, the new opera entitled "The Canterbury Pilgrims," written by Mr. Gilbert à Beckett, and composed by Mr. C. V. Stanford, was successfully produced on Monday night. The story is rather suggested by than founded upon Chaucer's memorable poem, but most of the familiar personages enumerated in his recital of the famous pilgrimage are at least made visible as accessories. A good libretto has been provided, and in the course of the three acts of the opera, appropriately commencing at the old Tabard hostelry in Southwark, a simple love-story has been dramatically worked out. The composer has made effective use of the old part-song, "Summer is a-coming in," the most ancient English madrigal; and Cicely's song, "Dawn of the Young Day," may be considered the gem of an opera suffering from blank-verse recitation being substituted for spoken dialogue. A very efficient interpretation is supplied by Miss Clara Perry as Cicely, Miss Burton as Dame Margaret, Mr. Ludwig as Sir Christopher, Mr. Barrington Foote as Hal o' the Chepe, and Mr. B. Davies as Hubert Lovel, the valorous London apprentice. Orchestra and chorus proved most efficient, and librettist, composer, Mr. Augustus Harris as stage manager, and Mr. Carl Rosa were enthusiastically summoned when the curtain fell.

At the LYCEUM, Mr. Lawrence Barrett has appeared in "Richelieu," but has not startled the playgoing public by showing he is an exceptionally capable exponent of the wily Cardinal. His embodiment is suggestive of the practical actor, but is deficient in the force and humour which his predecessors have accustomed a metropolitan audience to expect. Mr. James Fernandez was an excellent Baradas, and Mr. Irish played Joseph with commendable care; but it cannot be said that the general representation reached that high standard the frequenters of this theatre have been lately taught to anticipate.

A three-act farcical comedy, entitled "Not a Word," has been brought out at the AVENUE THEATRE, now under the management of Mr. Lee Balmaine. Although liberally embellished, the piece is without any intrinsic merit. Transferring to London the action of "Le Carnival de la Merle Blanche," by MM. Chivot and Duru, a Palais-Royal vaudeville, produced in Paris about ten years since, the adapter, Mr. Owen Dove, has rendered the originally extravagant story utterly incomprehensible.

At the CRYSTAL PALACE a panorama of the Battle of Tel-el-Kebir is now exhibited, in place of the "Siege of Paris," which has been removed to Berlin. The artist, M. Paul Phillipoteaux, has produced an effective picture, though he has taken artistic freedom in the arrangement of his military details.

Mr. W. Lestocq, of the Vaudeville Theatre, has written the words, and Mr. W. S. Penley, of the Comedy, has composed a pretty and most effective song for Miss Minnie Palmer, "Love Comes with the Dawn." Both gentlemen have done themselves credit, and the song has been received with marked favour.

The Triumph, having undergone an extensive refit at Portsmouth, including repairs to her hull and machinery, the fitting of a new steel crank-shaft, and an armament of machine-guns, completed the full-power trial of her machinery on Monday, under the superintendence of officers of the Steam Reserve. The ship was somewhat light, her draught forward being 20 ft. 9 in., and 24 ft. 6 in. aft. The mean of the two hours' continuous steaming was as follows:—Steam in boilers, 30·93 lbs.; vacuum, 27·12 in. forward and 26·93 in. aft; revolutions, 68·35 per minute; mean pressure in cylinders, 16·55 lbs.; and indicated horse-power, 4,137·86. The mean of several runs on the measured mile gave a speed of 13·549 per hour. The Triumph will be pushed forward for commission, the date fixed for completion being May 15.

The Times is informed that the inhabitants of Holyhead have addressed a petition to the Admiralty praying that Holyhead may be made a permanent naval station. The memorialists point out that Holyhead is much more convenient than Liverpool as a station for one of her Majesty's ships, inasmuch as the anchorage is good, the moorings are not likely to be interfered with, and there is hardly any tide or current in Holyhead new harbour. There are, however, political reasons for keeping a ship at Liverpool, tides and currents notwithstanding; but there is no reason why Holyhead should not be utilised as a naval station when required.

THE discussion on the Army Estimates on Monday night was sufficiently interesting and important. Although Mr. Dawnay probably allowed his youthful zeal to outrun his discretion, and was led away by an ingenuous love of truth to formulate charges which were expressive of the convictions of officers rather than of the profession of facts which they could substantiate by direct evidence before a court of justice, he did good service, and told the country a good deal of what was wholesome for them to know, if it would take heed of it, concerning the operations "of the system" in the field in the recent Egyptian Campaign. "Military necessities," of which Colonel Stanley spoke, were put forward by Sir John Adye as the over-ruling cause of the great defects regarding medical matters brought to light in the Egyptian Campaign; but when Colonel Stanley, an ex-Secretary of State for War, lent his authority to the declaration that a sudden change of plan made secrecy necessary, and that there was not the opportunity of making the ordinary arrangements beforehand, so that what had been done was turned to another purpose, we are simply astounded. We cannot suppose that he knew the truth, and, for the purpose of covering his own share in the antecedent modifications to some of which the misworking of the medical transport was due, that he deliberately stated that which was contrary to the fact. Sudden change of plan! When it was known to every authority, before the Commander-in-Chief left England, that Ismailia was to be the base; when the stores at the arsenals were directed to Port Said and Ismailia weeks before the expedition started; when it, in fact, was his boast, and not an unreasonable one, that Sir Garnet Wolseley, ere he departed from London, had indicated the very day on which he intended to make his entry into Cairo! The difference between the thunderbolt Lord Wolseley hurled at the Medical Department before the Morley Committee, and the piles of soft-sawder directed upon the same body through his despatches, was, we think, very satisfactorily explained by pointing out the distinction between the conduct of the Medical officers on the field and the general management of the Medical Department by the superior authorities in quarters and in the hospitals. When are we to have done with departmental organisation? When have an end of the incessant collapse of systems which are a cloak and cover of personal failure? We admit that under no circumstances can there be a complete organisation in warfare, such perfection that there shall be no breakdown in any part of it, and that there shall not be pain which might be alleviated and cured, and sickness that might be prevented, amongst armies in the field. Let philanthropists do what they will—all the nurses and all the red crosses, and all the Knights of St. John, their bandages and painkillers and ambulances—there must for every battle be scenes of suffering and of neglect, which, if duly stated by enthusiastic novices or sympathetic eye-witnesses, would produce an outcry against any department connected with the cure of the wounded in the field, and excite what is called indignation among the public. But making all allowances for such inevitable defects, there is still much to be done in providing proper attention, not so much from the medical officers, as from those who serve under them, to the wounded in the field. When the Duke of Connaught advanced with the Guards across the entrenchments at Tel-el-Kebir, shortly after the assault had been delivered, and Alison's brigade and Graham's brigade had passed on in pursuit of the flying Egyptians, his Royal Highness perceived that the hospital orderlies, instead of attending to our wounded, who were lying in every direction, were busily engaged in rifling the bodies of the dead Egyptians! Had some of those scoundrels been hanged on the spot, or in default of gallows been executed on the bridge at Tel-el-Kebir by the Provost-Marshals in sight of the whole Army, an example would have been set which might have quickened the action of those in charge, for some time to come. No English Army is properly provided with—or is likely to be provided with, as long as the present namby-pamby theories are entertained at the Horse Guards, or at any rate at the War Office—a Military Police, to look after the discipline of troops in the field, including Army Hospital Corps and civilian accompaniments, and see that the Transport and Hospital Service Department attend to their duties. Mr. Dawnay pointed out that the views at the War Office regarding the organisation of the Medical Department are in direct opposition to those of every commanding officer examined before the Committee; indeed, it was mockery to examine the Duke of Cambridge, Lord Wolseley, Sir D. Lysons, and other officers of authority and experience, in order to come to a decision directly contrary to their recommendations. Of course, Lord Hartington would not venture to interfere with the Guards' system. The officers of those seven battalions represent too much weight in society and in the country for any Minister to resist; but the War Office absolutely accept all the consequences of the logical dilemma in which they placed themselves by their strange conduct. "We say that the regimental system was inefficient; that it cannot be restored; that it would incur an increase of expense of £22,000 a year (for which we might have at least fifty extra clerks at Whitehall and in Pall Mall); that the results of the system we have introduced in lieu of the regimental system are most satisfactory; but, nevertheless, we shall not give the Guards the advantages of the new system! We do not, wish to make any considerable change in the system of the Guards. Let them put up with all the deficiencies because they are the Guards; but to make things square, we are going to establish a general hospital in London, which will give the whole Army Medical profession a great opportunity for improving themselves. These by thy gods, O Israel!"

THE discussion on the Navy Estimates on Thursday night was conducted under circumstances not very creditable to the House of Commons. That on such an occasion the attendance of honourable Members was so limited that a count-out was threatened and tried at the commencement of the speech of Lord Henry Lennox, would be simply disgraceful if the manner in which discussions on the condition of the Navy have been conducted did not offer some excuse for the apathy of the honourable gentlemen, who consider it merely their duty to vote money, without sifting the reasons for each vote. Notwithstanding all protestations to the contrary, the management of the Navy is a question of party, almost of party only. Mr. W. H. Smith out of office gets up and delivers himself of a documentary address, as it may be called, bristling with figures, to show that the management of the Navy is not what it ought to be; and perhaps it would be too much to expect three-fourths of the Members of the House to listen with pleasure or intelligent comprehension to the comparisons and analysis of figures in which the right honourable gentleman displays his usual mastery and clearness in business matters. Therefore, it was not surprising that the prediction which Sir E. Reed repeated to the House, "that Members would go out almost to a man when the Speaker left the chair to go into Committee on the Estimates," was realised, and that the Ministerial side was represented by about a dozen, and the Opposition by half as many honourable Members of the Commons in Committee of the whole House. On the other hand, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, the Secretary of the party which is in power, gets up and declares that all the statements made to discredit the Naval administration are untrustworthy, and infers that the Admiralty, in their efforts to secure the efficiency of the service, have to encounter great difficulties from the action of their predecessors. As the leading journal observes yesterday, "the facts are never available in an uncontested form." The public, stunned by the clamour of rival voices from the recognised authorities on both sides of the House, shakes its head and shuts its ears despairingly. "Ordinary people," says the Times, "who do not profess to be experts have no means to determine whether Mr. Campbell-Bannerman and Mr. T. Brassey, or Mr. W. H. Smith and Lord Henry Lennox, not to speak of independent critics such as Sir E. Reed, have stated the case most accurately. The Secretary of the Admiralty would be wanting in all the traditions of his office, if he did not assure Parliament that the expenditure asked for in the Estimates was sufficient to secure the country an efficient and adequate Naval force." Now, this being so, is there not a clear reason, almost an irresistible argument, for the adoption of the course we have recommended repeatedly in these columns, and of which we earnestly reiterate the advisability now, of an independent and thorough inquiry into the actual condition of the Navy? We do not demand that the Navy shall be a match in seamen and guns and armour for all the navies of the world together; but we ask that it should present, in its ordinary condition, guarantees that, in event of war with a possible combination, and not improbable alliance, between two of the large Naval powers, the Navy should be able to enter upon the conflict with assurance of equality in all respects, in matériel and personnel, leaving the country in modest confidence as to the result of the conflict. It is easy for Mr. Campbell-Bannerman to dispose of the tabular statements which puzzle Sir Thomas Symonds, who composes them almost as much, we should think, as they do those who are condemned to analyse and peruse them; but if that gallant old officer's contention, that we are inferior to the French in sea-going force, have the shadow of a basis of truth about it, the matter should be set right, and although we do not think it at all advisable to have a Commission or a Committee to test the validity of Sir Thomas Symonds's fears, or the accuracy of his tables, we think it very important that there should be some authoritative inquiry into the alarming accounts which honourable Members connected with the service give of its present condition, absolutely and relatively. It is no use to talk or write about ou officers and sailors doing their duty as of yore, or to indulge in the flourishing rigmarole of assurances that British seamen, if called upon, will always do so-and-so. Let the country be satisfied that the money voted by the House of Commons is turned to account, and that it produces a satisfactory outcome in the shape of an efficient Fleet, with contented and able officers and men in all departments; and if the nation is not satisfied, the remedy is easy. On the other hand, if it be shown that the Naval Administration gives the Empire the worth of its money, but that there is still a shortcoming in matters of importance, Parliament will ungrudgingly vote any increase that may be demanded; and it will be a dastardly and unworthy Government which, from any considerations of expediency, or from any desire to face the constituencies with demonstrations of its having effected empty retrenchments, allows the interests and the existence of the Great Empire, over the destinies of which it is called upon to preside, to be endangered by an incompetent administration of a defective fleet.

WE announced lately that it had been decided that commanding officers of the Indian regiments were to be allowed to hold on for a maximum of nine years, or up to 32 years' service. Now, it may be as well to point out here, for the fact is evidently not generally known, even in official quarters, that the Secretary of State was entirely misled by the Army Commission which sat at Simla, and recommended the seven years' limit of command. Whether the members of the Commission were also themselves ignorant is, of course, only known to themselves; but however that may be, the recommendation they made, and which the Secretary of State determined to act upon, was directly in contradiction to the terms of an Act of Parliament known as the Henley Clause, and could only be carried out by breach of a contract made and entered into by the Secretary of State's predecessor, that all officers who joined the Staff Corps should be provided with "suitable employment." Now it so happens that the "suitable employment" cannot be found for a tenth part of these officers after they are removed from their command. So that a serious difficulty arises. The officers in question have supposed all this time that the order was rescinded, as the carrying out of the measure was to all intents and purposes illegal; or, at all events, that some compensation would be granted to them, in the event of the Secretary of State determining to abide by his original decision, on the same principle that compensation was allowed in the case of the officers of the lately disbanded regiments. But now that they find themselves turned adrift, in spite of the Act of Parliament and an official guarantee, and without compensation of any kind being offered, they are bringing forward the true state of the case and memorialising Parliament, the result of which action will be that the Secretary of State will be obliged to reopen the whole question, and will, no doubt, experience some difficulty in getting matters straight again without recouping the officers thus deprived of their employment some of the loss they have sustained. The recommendation of the Army Commission is the more strange in that, putting aside the Act of Parliament and guarantee, their action was altogether unprecedented, the limit of tenure order having, in British regiments, been inapplicable to present incumbents, even though they were serving under no guarantee of any sort. The following is a copy of one of the memorials sent in, and is a fair sample of the whole:—

> "Memorial of ——, of H.M.'s —— Staff Corps.—Showeth that officers in the East India Company's service enjoyed the privilege of remaining in command of their regiments till promotion to Major-General, or obtaining Colonels' allowances; and that all privileges enjoyed under the said East India Company were guaranteed to your memorialist by the Act of Parliament known as the Henley Clause. That your memorialist has nevertheless been removed from the command of his regiment by General Order G., No. 209, dated 1882; notwithstanding that he was a present incumbent in command when the said General Order was issued. That your memorialist having suffered grievous loss and hardship by the infraction of an Act of Parliament under the protection of which he was serving, now begs that he may be granted due compensation, including retention of the same interest in Lord Clive's Fund, which he would have continued to possess had he been allowed, in obedience to the Act of Parliament above quoted, to remain in command of his regiment till attaining to Colonels' allowances. That your memorialist has not, since removal from command of his regiment, been provided with any other description of the 'suitable employment' guaranteed by the Secretary of State, when your memorialist was, on the faith of the said guarantee, induced to enter the Staff Corps."

It is now pointed out that the Army Commission, and not the Secretary of State, were the real originators of the blunder. Here we have another instance of the greatest of the many disadvantages under which the Army at present labours. The Army, both in India and at home, is ruled by a civilian. That civilian is but imperfectly acquainted with the rules and regulations affecting individual officers. He is obliged, therefore, to seek outside aid to enable him to keep himself posted as to the wants of the service. The best way of securing that aid is by means of commissions or committees. Those committees are composed, for the most part, of officials who have reputations to make. The surest way of making these reputations is for them to suggest sweeping changes; as to the carrying-out of which they may afterwards be committed, and thus come to the front. It does not matter to them whether the change they advocate is legal or not; it is a change, and that is all they think about. Thus it was with the measure recommended by the Simla Commission. At first sight, the idea, no doubt, appeared a most happy one, and the Secretary of State was naturally influenced by it. The question of its legality never appears to have arisen until now, when, the removals having been formally gazetted, it all at once is discovered that the responsible Minister has been led into the committal of an act which is in direct violation of the terms of the contract entered into by the officers of the Staff Corps and the Government of the day, when the amalgamation of the Imperial and Indian Forces was carried out twenty-two years ago. These, briefly stated, are the points of the case which the Removed Indian Colonels are now fighting against the India Office. At first sight, it may have appeared as though the Secretary of State had been guilty of an intentional breach of faith. It will be seen, however, that there are excuses to be made. Some, doubtless, will contend that a high official ought to have shown more respect for the Act of Parliament and Government guarantee. But we must not be too exacting. The Simla Committee ought clearly to have considered the legality of the measure they recommended before suggesting such a sweeping innovation, and upon their shoulders must rest much of the blame for the serious difficulty which has arisen.

THAT "knowledge is power," and that "reading makes a full man," in the words of Bacon, are truisms which it should be superfluous to waste time in demonstrating, though there may still be a few who are inclined to look upon reading as unnecessary in so practical a profession as the Navy. That the Naval officer should have a competent knowledge of his profession will be universally admitted; and how can this be obtained without reading and study, when the fighting-machine becomes daily more complex and scientific in its nature? As has been well said by "Julien de la Gravière," the Navy was formally a handicraft; it is now a science. We are led to these remarks by the lecture of Captain Long, R.N., on Friday, May 2, at the United Service Institution, on "Libraries considered as subsidiary to education, and the best means of diffusing information among the Officers and Men of H.M.'s Navy." The lecture was full of information, and although the attendance was not numerous, the discussion was interesting. Yet we cannot but think that the practical points were somewhat overlooked, or overlaid with detail. The want to be supplied is information on professional subjects, especially to officers afloat, as pointed out by Commander Dawson, who complained that when he was serving in a ship in the Pacific as Gunnery Lieutenant, no scientific work of reference was available to him except a copy of Sir H. Douglas's "Naval Gunnery," which was his own property. Commander Dawson, no doubt, alluded to things as they were 25 years ago, and much has occurred in the interval; but is it certain that, as compared with foreign navies, our ships are at all well supplied with scientific books bearing upon the profession? Is it not the fact that even English books on Naval subjects, or translations of them, can with more certainty be found on board foreign men-of-war, whether French, German, Italian, or Russian, than on board our own ships, whether supplied direct by the Governments to which they belong or from Naval libraries liberally subsidised by foreign Admiralties? We unhesitatingly affirm this to be the case, from our own observation; and that this is so, is far from creditable to our Naval Administration. Captain Long's lecture was directed to the measures to be taken to remedy this defect, and in his summary of what exists he gave some valuable information to his hearers. It was certainly news to a good many that there is a valuable library of 25,000 volumes at the Admiralty "which may be consulted," causing several inquiries as to who should be applied to for access to it; and we trust that now that there is a Naval Intelligence Department more use may be made of it. Turning to Captain Long's conclusions, he proposes the "establishment of a Royal Naval Institute at Greenwich, with the provision of reference libraries afloat," and the revision of existing seamen's libraries. With those suggestions we entirely agree. A Naval Institute, following the lines of the Royal Engineer and Artillery Institutes, should be at once formed, with its headquarters either at the Admiralty or at Greenwich. The Journal of the Institute should be published monthly, and we would suggest that it should be placed in charge of a salaried officer attached to the Naval Intelligence Department. Lectures should be given and discussions encouraged at the Naval sea-ports, being only reported in the Journal of the Institute in very special cases. We would propose that the expense of printing the Journal should be borne by voluntary subscriptions of officers, only those subscribing being entitled to have the Journal sent to them. The library should be similiarly managed, and professional works lent to subscribers. The Admiralty might assist in starting the library by gifts of books. To establish a Royal Naval Institute would be a great step, and having professional libraries available would be another; but we cannot think that this is all that would be required. We want to ensure that all standard professional works should be supplied to large ships, and this can only be done by an official "officers' library." At present, it is true, the seamen's library is practically a ship's library, and that many technical works principally intended for officers have found their way into it. But this is done in a casual way, depending more, it would almost seem, on interest being used by authors to get their works ordered by the Admiralty, than on any settled system. By all means improve the seamen's library; but an officers' library should be added to contain technical works. At present, there are a large and increasing number of books issued to Captains of a technical nature, many of which are obsolete, while others are "confidential;" and at the same time, some similar works are supplied to the library. Can any reason, for instance, be given why "Fincham on Masting" should be issued to Captains, while "White's Naval Architecture" is in the seamen's library? Is it still necessary, too, that twelve volumes of "Hertslett's Treaties" should encumber, rather than adorn, the shelves of the Captain's cabin? We would suggest that there should be an officers' library supplied to the Captain, for which a place in his cabin should be fitted by the dockyard, to contain a carefully selected list of technical works, to be issued to officers by the Paymaster under the Captain's sanction; strictly confidential books only being still issued to the Captain, to be kept under lock and key. Such is a sketch of the more important steps which we should like to see taken with the view of carrying out the objects aimed at by the lecturer. In conclusion, we are tempted to allude to some remarks made by Captain Fitzgerald, R.N., at the discussion of Captain Long's lecture as to the small attendance at the theatre, and usually slender result obtained, which he attributed to the lectures not being popular enough in their character. Without entirely agreeing with this criticism, we would certainly urgently impress upon those who undertake lectures on professional subjects to be thoroughly practical in their views, and to avoid somewhat pedantic allusions to the introduction of the art of printing, or to an English Naval history which came to an abrupt conclusion in 1422!

We hear that scarlatina is prevalent at Castletown, so, presumably, the intention of sending the Channel Fleet there for torpedo practice will be abandoned. This will not be a grievous disappointment to those on board the several ships, as Berehaven is not quite regarded as an Elysium.

The Admiralty have issued (April) a programme of the Torpedo Gunnery and Pilotage Courses for 1884, to be substituted for previous statements, which, however, we do not think it necessary to reproduce, as the regulations are accessible to, or in the possession of, all those who are interested. A list of applicants is kept at the Admiralty, from which "a few other officers will be allowed, at their Lordships' discretion, to follow the special full-pay torpedo course" (66 days from July 16 to October 15) by selection, in addition to the Gunnery and Torpedo Lieutenants and Lieutenants R.M.A. The paper deals principally with the dates. Four courses are to be arranged for Engineer officers, to last nine weeks. Acting Sub-Lieutenants who entered the Britannia prior to December 31 are not required to go through a Pilotage course. Those who entered after that date will follow a course, and will be examined at the Hydrographic Department, on the days shown, at 11 a.m. Note.—Other officers, desirous of passing in Pilotage for 1st-class ships, will be required to present themselves for examination on the above dates; should it become necessary to fix an examination-day in any of the months not mentioned in the table, for candidates for 1st-class ships, the examination-day will be fixed for the fourth Wednesday of the month, as heretofore.

Commodore Molyneux arrived at Suakim in the Tyne, flying the broad pendant, on May 7.

It is nowhere specified in the Admiralty Instructions to officers of what rank or upon what occasions the salute of "piping the side" shall be given. The result is that the custom varies in different ships, giving rise to no little jealousy and ill-feeling. In some ships it is the custom to pipe all officers of above Commander's rank, in others only Executive officers of that rank and the commanding officers of ships. We believe that some years back the Admiralty refused to be drawn in this subject, and left a discretionary power in regard to it in the hands of individual Captains. A similar vagueness obtains in regard to manning yards, which is purely a custom of the service, and is a salute which can be given to any one.

The Viedomosti states that Sir E. Reed has sent to the Russian Admiralty plans for an ironclad superior to any afloat.

While employment in the Royal Navy is rarely undesirable, we are sorry that the Admiralty have considered it necessary to again send Commander Wollaston Karslake afloat in his present rank. After seven years' active service, upwards of three of which were in command of the Fantôme, and from which vessel he returned in May last, after a very creditable commission, he is a second time appointed to her; but we trust that promotion is not far distant. This officer was advanced to Commander's rank for services in Western Africa, under Sir William Hewett, and his subsequent career entitles him to consideration.

It would be a great boon to the Naval service in East Indian waters were the Admiralty to acquire possession of the Indian Government Dockyard at Bombay. This yard was established when the Indian Navy was in existence. It is still maintained for the repairs of the obsolete and heterogeneous vessels which now constitute the Indian Marine, and when it is absolutely necessary for her Majesty's ships in the East Indies to have repairs effected, they were sent there also; but as there is a sufficient staff, plant, and machinery maintained for a dockyard of the size of Sheerness, the work done at Bombay is found by the Admiralty to be so expensive that only what is absolutely necessary is ever done. The only Imperial yard on the East Indian station is at Trincomalee, but that is merely a depôt for stores, with the exception of a few artificers, who are maintained to effect casual repairs.

We regret that, by an oversight in our issue of the 26th ult., some doubts were thrown on the legality of a court-martial recently held at Portsmouth, in regard to the employment at it of a short-hand writer. It appears the wish for short-hand writers was approved by Order in Council, and promulgated some six months back, so that only an interval of 15 months elapsed between the issue of the Memorandum and this Order in Council. We are sure all who know the Judge-Advocate of the Fleet, Mr. G. P. Martin, feel certain that everything would be done to render the proceedings in point of law perfectly valid.

The Admiralty have issued a circular specifying the rates to be paid by men serving in the Royal Marines in purchasing their discharge under the new scale sanctioned by the Order in Council of February 2, 1884. The number of men to be discharged and the selection of the individuals will be governed by such instructions as the Admiralty may from time to time issue for extending or diminishing the transfer, or for wholly suspending the permission.

Portsmouth Dockyard presents, as is usual at this season, a somewhat busy aspect. The ships of the Reserve Squadron, in various stages of coaling, docking, and refitting, fill up nearly all the available space at the north end; the Hercules and Lord Warden in the tidal basin, the remainder in dock. The jetties are deserted, save by the Collingwood, that remarkable-looking production of modern science, which, perhaps, carries off the palm, even among recent ironclads, for unsightliness. Her engines, which broke down on the last trial trip, are to be worked alongside the jetty on Tuesday next, preparatory to another trial on Wednesday. In the steam basin are the Triumph, with top-gallant masts on end; the Crocodile and Jumna; the Active, with her alterations completed and new armament on board; the Martin brig, repairing damages, having had her foremast head wrung by bracing up too sharp, and the Polyphemus, under the sheers, apparently pretty nearly up to her "toppling-over" draft. A photograph of this vessel exposed in the window of a well-known Portsmouth photographer, is marked "bow view," thereby illustrating the futility of any attempt on the part of the uninitiated to discriminate between the ends of the monster. If the Polyphemus has a stern, it is certainly presented in this photograph, but to the ordinary observer, she is as puzzling in this respect as the Skye-terrier to the two street urchins in Punch. The Impérieuse has returned to her native dock (No. 11), and is apparently destined to make a long stay there. The Camperdown makes progress but slowly. The Calliope will soon be ready for launching, and the front of the building slip is being opened in preparation for the event. The Emerald and Cormorant are in the covered docks off the ship basin, for extensive repairs, and hard by is the Imogene, yacht, purchased to replace the Antelope in Eastern waters. The large basin is occupied by the usual number of turret-ships, among which the Colossus may now be considered to have acquired a respectable seniority; she is still apparently far from completion, and the same may be said of the Edinburgh, in No. 13 dock. Moored near the Excellent may be seen the sea-going prize target of the future, a kind of raft, with three masts, on which a canvas screen will be hoisted.

During the last three years the Black Sea Steam Navigation Company have acquired five ocean liners, 350 feet long. The Moscow Volunteer Fleet has just been increased by the Kinfauns Castle; and within the next few weeks the Grosni, Slavianir, and Galitchanin, will be despatched from the Tyne to Sevastopol, for the Rodokonski Company.

In the report we published on April 5 of the Danish armour-plate trials, it was stated that after the first shot "the Brown plate showed deep cracks running from the point of impact to the left side of the plate." The Danish official photographs, taken of every plate after each shot fired, are before us. From these we find that the Brown plate resisted the first shot better than our report would lead our readers to understand. On the left of the point of impact, a crack started and ran some distance towards the left edge, and then forked, one leg reaching the side of the plate. These cracks do not appear to be at all "deep" in the photo; in fact, merely "hair cracks."

We believe it is quite true that Brigadier-General Stewart has declared that the Cavalry under his command could have made the march from Suakim to Berber across the Desert, and that other officers of less authority with the force have expressed a similar opinion. We are still compelled to express the conviction that the march would have been most hazardous and unwise. General Stewart's furthest point from the sea westwards was some 25 miles, and he had still to face 200 miles and more of desert, mountain, and deep sand in a hostile region, with every prospect of the wells being tampered with, and with the certainty of great scarcity of water. And when the force reached Berber, if it did so at all, how could it have reached Khartoum?

The appointment of General Sir Collingwood Dickson on the Ordnance Committee at the War Office, which expires in October next, is, we believe, to be prolonged to April, 1885.

Mr. Campbell-Bannerman made what we may fairly describe as an ingenious reply to the attacks directed upon him from various quarters of the House; but his speech displayed rather more of the ability of the Nisi Prius advocate than we like, although it must be admitted to some of the thrusts he offered a very fair defence. His use of what lawyers call "confession and avoidance" in the course of his speech was conspicuous enough. He agreed in much that had been said against what is going on, and regretted its existence; but then, he remarked, there was something to be said on the other side. He insisted that the delays which had been commented upon in the completion of ships' armaments were not due to manufacture, but to the changes which were constantly being investigated; but he promised amendment, and that any hindrance in future would not be on the scale to which they had been accustomed to. The Admiralty and he were quite anxious to complete ships quickly, and to alter their designs as little as possible, but then these changes came in again. His defence of the ton as a unit of measurement came at last to a tu quoque. The Admiralty had tried to get rid of it as a mode of measurement and comparison, but at last, going back, year after year, they reached the Right Hon. W. H. Smith, and then they were obliged to ask, "Shall we tamper with his figures, or leave them alone?" It was all very well, no doubt, to show that Sir Thomas Symonds had made a trifling little error of £1,300,000 in an obvious calculation which could be made by anybody but Sir T. Symonds, it would seem. What had that, however, to do with the essential argument addressed to the country by the Admiral of the Fleet, that our ironclads were inferior in speed and armament, or would soon become so in the aggregate, and ship for ship, to those of the French Navy? Let us hope that Sir Thomas Symonds is as wrong in these calculations as he was in his figures. There is one part of Mr. Campbell-Bannerman's speech to which certain aggrieved classes will turn with satisfaction, and henceforth they may abide their time in patience for the result of the hon. gentleman's looking into the case. He has bound himself up in promises, and has a busy time before him. We can fancy him sitting in his room at Whitehall surrounded with portentous boxes, to the contents of which, one after the other, he may apply the distracted hours of his official life, in the intervals of the business of the moment, before he goes down to the House of Commons to answer questions from all the Naval officers in Opposition, or the amateurs who are good enough to take up Naval grievances. There is the Engineers' box! Mr. Bannerman admits that they have some reason to complain of inequalities in their pay, and he did not know why the eleven years' rule was adopted, nor see any use in it, but a re-arrangement would be troublesome. The Engineers really have not much to complain of; there was no difficulty in getting plenty of them. The system had been only established recently; nevertheless, he would look into their box and see if there was any anomaly or grievance in it to necessitate the opening-up of the general question. The box of grievances of the Petty Officers, Artificers, and Stewards would be kept locked for the present; he would not look into it. As to the Schoolmasters' box, he knew nothing at all about it, but he would look into it. As to the Paymasters' box, the stuff in it was very like that which was in the Engineers' box. Paymasters were very well paid, "taking them all round," whatever that may be; but, unfortunately, the Paymasters insist on taking themselves "all square" or "all angular," and they will not derive much comfort from the statement that a few years ago, too many of them were entered, and that there is an over-stock of them at present, or agree that there is no strong reason for reopening their box.

The regimental dinners, which are, as far as we know, unique and peculiar to our Army, promise to be very interesting this year. It is pleasant to welcome a Phœnix fresh from its ashes; to see the "Limmer" of to-day arise in purple and fine linen from the saw-dust and panelling of the good old days of "Archey," and "Clon," and Co., well patronised by soldiers whose fathers and grandfathers drank more than was always good for them in the dingy "Coffee-room" of yore. The Freemasons', the Holborn, the Albion, the Avenue, have still their faithful clientèle, and the Army and Navy Hotel bids fair for favour.

The intelligence given by a German paper that the Sultan had taken the extraordinary step of writing to the ex-Khedive, to ask him for his advice and opinions on the Egyptian question, is perfectly authentic, and we have seen a copy of Ismail Pasha's answer, which corresponds with the account given of it in the translation from the German, which was reproduced in some of the London newspapers in the foreign telegraphic summary. Ismail Pasha counsels the Sultan to make his peace with England, and to fall in with her policy with regard to Egypt; he expresses his regret that the Sultan should have thought fit to refuse a concession for another Canal, which Admiral Englefield sought when he was at Constantinople, with the view to give England a route of her own by the Gulf of Akaba; and he points out that, whatever the abstract rights of Turkey over Egypt may be, the fact of actual possession by England places the consideration of them in the second rank. In fact, the ex-Khedive displays the sagacity which never failed him in the treatment of Egyptian and Oriental questions, and in the control of his great dominions, till he came to loggerheads with the representatives of the Bondholders, and with the principal of the Dual Control, now swept into the limbo of political abortions.

We do not think that much benefit will be derived from the public attention being directed to the conduct of Colonel Burnaby and Sir Henry Havelock in the speeches and letters which have appeared with reference to certain charges, if so they may be called, preferred against Colonel Burnaby. With the political side of the quarrel we have nothing at all to do; but as far as our memory serves us, it was from a political point of view that the behaviour of Colonel Burnaby in the field was first assailed; for Sir Charles Dilke, angry, it would seem, with Colonel Burnaby, and seeking to discredit him with the electors of Birmingham, whose votes the latter was canvassing in view of the next election, virtually denounced the gallant officer for having used a double-barrelled gun to kill and wound the Arabs who were opposing the advance of the British corps to which Colonel Burnaby was temporarily attached, in their advance to Tokar. Colonel Burnaby's explanation of the manner in which it came to pass that he was obliged to use a double-barrelled gun, having no appropriate arms suitable to an officer in the field, must be accepted by all those who think he was right in taking the opportunity which was afforded to him of what is called "seeing active service" during his leave of absence in Egypt; but into a close investigation of the general question as to the proprietary of officers engaging in such expeditions from the mere love of excitement or adventure, or notoriety, we will say nothing, except this, that Sir Henry Havelock ought to be the last man in the world to hurl a stone at a brother officer from such a sling, unless in self-defence. He certainly was not on full pay at the time he went out to Egypt, and despite Sir Garnet Wolseley, led his own forlorn hope at Tel-el-Kebir, and whether he used revolver or sabre, or double-barrelled gun, in his attack on the Egyptian entrenchments, signifies, we think, very little one way or the other. But Sir Henry Havelock makes a mistake when he infers that Colonel Burnaby's employment in the Intelligence Department had no reason in it, and that it was but a mere pretext. He is evidently ignorant of the fact that Colonel Burnaby had travelled extensively in the Soudan; had visited Khartoum at the time of Gordon's first expedition; had crossed the desert; and had, with the facility he possesses of acquiring foreign languages, picked up a fair amount of Arabic, a knowledge of which by-the-bye, Gordon himself does not possess at all. We think it to be regretted that these officers should have come before the public as disputants in a question which it would be better to pass over in silence. The policy of permitting officers on full pay to engage in political controversy is one upon which we have strong opinions, but as we have seen a young officer in the Guards, scarcely out of his teens, get up and deliver a furious denunciation of the War Office, and direct an attack, almost personal, against the Secretary of State, in the House of Commons, we have arrived at the conclusion that it is one of the anomalies, as they are called, of our system, with which Parliamentary Government must be credited or otherwise, to the wonderment, if not the admiration, of surrounding nations.

Captain H. B. T. Haresfield, R.A., has been appointed A.D.C. to Major-General Smyth at Woolwich, vice Captain J. W. T. Spencer, R.A.

We notice with regret that the further discussion of the Army Estimates has been indefinitely postponed. Government were given last Monday enough money to "carry on," and are under no necessity, as far as they are concerned, to take the remaining Votes till a late period of the Session. We shall probably have a repetition of last year's arrangements, by which the most important votes of the Army Estimates were not taken till a morning sitting, on Saturday, August 8. We hope a protest will be entered against this novel and unconstitutional course. It is particularly important at the present moment to fix attention on our Naval and Military establishments. No doubt, the Government are anxious to get on with the legislation; but what is just now much more important than the Franchise Bill, or Redistribution, or even the disestablishment of the Lord Mayor of London, is that our Army and Navy should be ready, and—this is the point—known on the Continent to be ready, for any emergency. Votes 12 and 13—the one providing for warlike stores, the other for military works—were not reached on Monday. These votes require special explanation. The estimated expenditure for warlike stores is this year only £1,262,500, compared with £1,377,000 asked for in 1883-84. There is thus a clear reduction of £114,500. Again, the estimate (Vote 13) for military works is this year only £740,500, compared with £758,700, showing a reduction of £18,200. Are these Estimates sufficient to maintain our Military Establishments in a state of readiness for war? Is the condition of the armament of our fortresses at home and abroad so satisfactory that the Government can afford to cut down the supply of stores and war material? We do not hesitate to condemn these reductions. We fear Lord Hartington has been tempted to counterbalance the increased expenditure (£150,000) on account of pensions and retired pay of officers by reductions in Votes 12 and 13. The time he has chosen for doing this would appear to be singularly inopportune. Before Parliament met we were informed by the leading journal that the Government were about to apply for a large sum of money for the purposes of strengthening our coast and harbour defences at home. So far from this being the case, the Vote for Military Works is this year lower than it has ever been since the reduction of establishments after the Crimean War. The outlook abroad gives cause for anxiety, and no efforts should be spared in Parliament to bring home to Ministers the responsibility which they incur by neglecting to maintain the national defences in a state of efficiency.

Major C. H. F. Ellis, R.A., has been appointed Assistant to the Director of Artillery at the War Office, vice Colonel S. J. Nicholson, R.A.

The reorganisation of the French Army, which was commenced directly after the close of the Franco-German War, may now be considered as terminated. Strange to say, nothing gave so much difficulty as the question of promotion. Parliamentary committees and military committees haggled over this matter for twelve years, referring it back from one to another. A dozen War Ministers in succession had the affair under their consideration, but all in vain. Volumes might be written upon the various Bills laid on the table, discussed, and finally shelved. Compulsory service, the system of Army Corps, of the Reserves, of the Staff, of the length of service, of the armament, of the new fortifications, of new formation, of the registration of horses and carts throughout the country, and a variety of other military reforms, were proposed and got into working order with praiseworthy diligence and success; but the question of promotion was a nut almost impossible to crack. Now we see, however, that after twelve years of fruitless discussion, the French Chamber, probably in a fit of despair, voted the 57 articles of the new Bill on promotion in the course of two sittings. It is true that this was a first reading only, and that the Bill will have to be sent up to the Senate; but the French military papers seem sure that it will pass, because something must be done, and because what the Bill proposes to do is not much. At present, promotion in the French Army is regulated by the law of 1832, according to which corporals and serjeants are selected by choice; sub-lieutenants are chosen partly among the serjeants, partly among the pupils of St. Cyr and the Polytechnic; a third of the vacancies among the lieutenants and the captains are filled up by choice, and the other two-thirds go by seniority. For field officers the system of choice alone exists. We find this criticism of the law of 1832 in a French journal:—"No guarantee of fitness is demanded from officers promoted by seniority. No one dreams of denying that seniority gives serious claims, and yet an officer, on being invested with a more difficult and higher command, should give some proof of his capacity." The General in command of the 16th Army Corps said, "To imagine, after our sad experience of 1870, that an officer, no matter what his incapacity, must forcibly command a battalion in time, is absurdity itself, the negation of all necessity to work, the suppression of all emulation." Marshal Bugeaud expressed the same opinion many years ago in a more homely manner, when he said that the mule of Marshal Saxe made many campaigns with his master, and yet he always remained a mule. However, the Bill now voted in the French Chamber reposes on the principle that no officer will be able to gain a step in the Army without furnishing proof that he is fit for promotion. Only one article appears to have given rise to any discussion,—that laying down the conditions to be attached in future to obtaining the high dignity of Marshal of France. Colonel Tezenas proposed than the rank of Marshal should be suppressed as not it accordance with Republican institutions, and in fact during the great wars of the first Republic no bâtons were given to such men as Dumouriez, Hoche, Marcean, Pichegru, or Kléber. General Campernon, the War Minister, was strongly opposed to the rank of Marshal being suppressed, or to anything being done tending to obliterate incentives to patriotism and noble actions,—"Leave to each of our soldiers," he exclaimed, "the right of repeating the old saying,—'We have all a Marshal's bâton in our knapsack.'" The amendment of Colonel Tezenas was defeated by 319 to 198. There are now in France but three Marshals,—MacMahon, Canrobert, and Lebœuf. There is also ex-Marshal Bazaine on the other side of the Pyrenees.

It is stated that the abolition of the combash, or whip of hippopotamus hide, which was the recognised instrument of punishment in Egypt, has been accompanied by the introduction of the British cat-o'-nine tails, and that the Egyptians do not appreciate the humanitarian principles of the reformers, who have been applying the novelty very freely. We also hear that Mr. C. Lloyd has ordered the police in the towns to compel the males to resort to certain public inconveniences, in violation of their habits, customs, and religion, and that the results are very distressing.

It is a pity that there is no one in the House with the tenacity of purpose and desire for the welfare of the public service sufficiently strong to sustain any persistent efforts to get at the truth with regard to matters affecting the efficiency of the Army. Mr. Morgan, answering Sir George Balfour on Monday night, raised a cloud of dusty figures with regard to the condition of the Army with respect to crime, through which the Times and other papers pretended to discover great results in the way of improved morality and virtue. But what did the Judge-Advocate do? He contrasted the number of courts-martial in the home Army for the year 1883, with that for the year 1882, without giving the House the smallest data of comparison to show how these returns for 1882 stood with those for 1872, for instance. Nevertheless, let us be thankful for the fact that under every one of the 13 heads of crime there was a diminution, except under two. Commanding officers, however, and the authorities of the military prisons would not, perhaps, take such a rosy view of improvement in the conduct of the Army, not as compared with 1882, but with the bad old times, when discipline was strict, and when officers were not afraid of being put in the black books of the public and of the authorities for telling the truth about the state of their regiments. The leading journal, for once, seems to have been right in calling for a return to the practice which that most unhappy military maladministrator, Mr. Childers, knocked on the head. It is quite unquestionable that if offences which were formerly punished with considerable severity are to be passed over indulgently, and if young soldiers are allowed to indulge in little escapades which old soldiers were punished for perpetrating, the returns will show a gratifying decrease of military crime. An orator in the French Chamber, expatiating on the admirable behaviour of the French Army, remarked that the proportion of criminals in the ranks, compared with the number of criminals among the civil population, was about one to 900; but on being challenged for the data of his argument, he said he went upon the number of sentences of capital punishment pronounced, though not carried into effect, completely ignoring the difference between the confirmation of the death sentence by President Grèvy, when passed by a court of law, and the recommendation of a council of officers that the death sentence should be inflicted in the case of a military criminal; and if the punishment of death were abolished, we might take comfort to ourselves in the reflection that no one deserved it. It has been found that the decision of the home authorities to send prisoners, sentenced to penal servitude in India, to England to serve their time, has had an exceedingly mischievous effect. We are by no means convinced that the congratulations uttered in certain quarters on the improved condition of the Army in regard to crime amongst the young recruits is justified; but we willingly admit, and hear with pleasure, that graver offences have decreased in number, and it would give us great satisfaction indeed, if we could feel that all through the Army the relaxation of severity has been attended by corresponding advantages to tone and discipline.

Colonel Muradoff, a Mussulman, commanding the Taman Cossack Regiment, who conveyed the despatches announcing the submission of the Turcomans, has received the Order of St. Anne, and the portrait of the Czar set in diamonds. Alikhanoff, who brought about the submission of Merv, is an Asiatic.

General Gresley, Senator and ex-War Minister in France, has just been placed on the Retired List, after 39 years' service, on a pension of £420 a year.

The General Order regarding the change in the colour of summer clothing for the British troops in India directs that the wearing of white for certain duties is to be gradually introduced. No doubt, the "gradual" wording is a saving clause, so that Thomas Atkins may have no claim to compensation; but how is the order to be construed? Are the men to supply themselves with white only as their khaki wears out? This is obviously the intention, but it is not likely that commanding officers will so construe it. White clothing will be ordered for guards, walking out, &c., and the soldier will be compelled to supply himself accordingly, at the cost of at least five rupees for two suits, which is a suit too little. When khaki was introduced, the men's white clothing had to be got rid of at a great loss; and they were bound to get khaki suits at a cost of about three rupees per suit, three suits being the least they could do with. Now that these are thrown on their hands, it seems scarcely fair that the whole expense of the change should fall upon the soldier. So hated and detested is the khaki, that the soldier will willingly buy a white suit in place of it; but it is, nevertheless, unjust that individuals should have to bear the entire brunt of the failure of a "fad."

The Heeres-Zeitung gives an account of a new powder invented by Krupp. It is chocolate-brown, much closer, and is different from the old powder in its proportions. With the same initial velocity, the pressure is less. It explodes only in closed spaces, but in the open air and in powder-cases it burns without explosion. There is much less smoke. It may be used for guns of any calibre.

A second quarrel seems to have arisen between M. Jules Ferry and General Campenon. The former wishes to adjourn the discussion on the reduction of service in the active army to three years; he has no desire to see the one-year volunteer system suppressed, and he is opposed to seminarists being forced to serve. Under these circumstances, M. Jules Ferry wishes to put off swallowing a pill which will be so bitter for him as long as possible. The Minister of War, on the other hand, is all in favour of getting the Bill passed at once.

The other night, at the camp of Sathonay, some thieves managed to get into a hut occupied by a company of the 121st, and succeeded in laying hands upon twenty porte-monnaies, which they emptied. As the soldiers had received their back pay the day before, the thieves made a good harvest. Strange to say, only a week before a company of the same regiment was robbed in a similar way.

The way in which Garrison Schools affect the working members of some depôts and regiments, by taking officers off the duty roster, and no provision being made for their relief, should be looked into. In one depôt, one of the busiest, if not the largest, in supplying recruits to the Army, the number of officers for duty are two, viz.,—the second-in-command and the adjutant. The other two officers, viz., a captain and one subaltern of a 2nd battalion, are absent for purpose of qualifying for examinations for promotion. "There are," says a letter to a friend, "over 100 Line recruits in barracks, four companies to be paid and commanded, the Militia staff attached for pay. The second-in-command and a major of 17 years' service are on alternate duty as weekly orderly officer, with the remaining subaltern officer (adjutant), who relieves the second-in-command as orderly officer; but the second-in-command is president of canteen, mess, and library, the adjutant the only member of each committee. According to regulations, allowing one captain and two subalterns when 150 Militia were attached, it was hoped the case might be altered; but owing to the depôt being unpopular, and the pay to Militia officers having been questioned, and refused, no one would apply to do duty. I may add to this, that during the past year the second-in-command was left to command this depôt nearly 5½ months, at the same time doing company duty and acting president to the various institutions, and the 2nd battalion captain was absent on same duty—garrison class—for eight months, during which time we were more than ever full, 550 men being for some time crowded into the space calculated for 241. I mention this, to point out the fact that this is a very busy depôt, and contributes more to the supply of recruits than any other. Yet it is worked on as small, if not a smaller, footing than many of the idler ones. The adjutant has, in addition to his orderly-room, two companies, serjeants' mess, and management of P.M.O., to carry out the musketry instruction of recruits now going on; and if he can get into mufti by 4 p.m. one day in the week, he is lucky. We are given to understand that no relief is to be sent here, and that we are to carry on till the end of June next (a lively prospect, after the past year's work as a reflection), and that no application to get relief will get beyond the general office,—orders being 'to run the depôt at its present strength,' under the fast increasing system of squeezing work for same pay, with an increasing responsibility in public money, which after all is the chief complaint now, with young colour-serjeants, and constant changes."

L'Armée Francaise has taken some observations we made on the Tonquin affair in bad part. We said that the French were engaged in "breaking a butterfly on the wheel," as the enemy made no resistance. This is no fault of General Millot and his troops, but very fortunate for them. Everyone thought that desperate resistance would be offered at Bacninh, and so the walls fell down like those of Jericho, and instead of losing hundreds of men, the victory was almost bloodless. So much the better for the French.

The Progrès Militaire remarks, in speaking of Tonquin, that General Millot has received with all kinds of honours the Ambassadors sent by the Court of Hué to arrange for carrying out the treaty which conceded a protectorate over Anam and Tonquin. "Precedents, however," adds the Progrès, "are not such as to give great confidence in the result of this diplomatic mission. The Ambassadors, who on the first occasion accompanied M. Harmand, were completely lost sight of until they reappeared in the ranks of the Chinese at Bacninh. In virtue of the fatalist principle by which they are guided, the Chinese and Anamites yield only to force. France, which has shaken off all prejudices, even those of philosophy, owes it to her interests to prove to the people of Indo-China that she is powerful enough to establish herself in those regions handed over to barbarism." In the meantime, a number of Republicans are raising their voices against costly expeditions, and M. Jules Ferry, who seems to have the appetite of Oliver Twist, has been sternly reminded of what he said at Périgueux a few weeks ago—"The period of military operations in Tonquin is over." As one of our Parisian contemporaries remarks:—"M. Jules Ferry did not speak the truth. Not only have military operations not been terminated, but it is M. Jules Ferry who has ordered them to be continued. A conflict arose between the Prime Minister and the Minister of War on this subject. It may be remembered that after the capture of Bacninh, General Brière de l'Isle seized upon Thai-Nguyen, which he afterwards abandoned in conformity with instructions received from General Millot. Now, General Millot had acted on the order of the War Minister; in fact, it is the opinion of General Campenon that the more we extend our base of operations to Tonquin, the greater will be the sacrifices in the shape of men and money required for the occupation of the Delta of the Red River; he thinks, too, that the possession of Thai-Nguyen will have the inconvenience of immobilising troops whose presence in France might, in case of necessity, be useful for the defence of the country. Without taking any notice of these objections, M. Jules Ferry sent an order to General Millot to reoccupy Thai-Nguyen." The quarrel between the Prime Minister and the Minister of War will probably be settled, as far as the expense of the expedition is concerned, by making John Chinaman pay for it. The French Government, in fact, is said to have demanded an indemnity of £5,000,000 from China; and its intention is, should this sum be refused, to seize on some ports, and ask either Russia or America to decide on the merits of the case. Should the question be brought before a Russian court, we trow that the difficulty will not be brought to a speedy termination. Referred to America, the probability is that matters would be quickly arranged, for our cousins have no wish to see commercial relations with China disturbed.

According to L'Avenir Militaire, the German Ambassador in Paris has informed M. Jules Ferry that General de Gallifet will be received with much pleasure should he be sent to represent the French Army at the grand cavalry manœuvres in Germany

The French Minister of War and the Prime Minister appear to be still at loggerheads with regard to the Tonquin Campaign,—General Campenon wishes to keep the Delta, while M. Jules Ferry, far more ambitious, desires to push his conquests much further, regardless of expense. Both Ministers have their adherents in the Chamber. A journal which is opposed to the Prime Minister, informs us that when the Chamber assembles he will ask for 40,000,000f.,—25,000,000f. to pay what is already owing, and 15,000,000f. for covering expenses. Now, the writer points out that if the expedition be maintained at its present strength, the 15,000,000f. for the future will not go very far. It is asserted, in fact, that the expedition will, for this year, have cost by the end of May 42,000,000f.,—that is to say, £80,000 a month, besides wear and tear. Ergo, the writer shows that by the end of the year M. Jules Ferry will require an additional 56,000,000f., or over £2,000,000; and this being the case, he declares that France should be satisfied with the occupation of a few seaports, Hué, and a few citadels inland. These might be held with 5,000 men. Should Parliament, however, sanction the views of M. Jules Ferry, then the expeditionary force will have to be kept up at its present strength, for Annam and Tonquin have a population of 18,000,000 souls.

The discussion on the subject of the demolition of the enceinte round Paris, advocated by the Municipal Council, has drawn forth from a French military writer the remark that the Municipal Council cares little for the defence of the country, which has been too often sacrificed to party interests. He adds:—"The demolition now demanded reminds us of a mot which was pronounced on the occasion of the construction of the enceinte. In 1840 opinions were divided as to the system of fortifications. Some persons were in favour of a continuous enceinte with bastions; others were in favour of a certain number of detached forts established at a distance from the city in order to cover the approaches. Both systems were defended by military men of great eminence. Marshal Clausel and General Hako advocated the continuous enceinte, while Marshal Soult and Generals Regniat and Bernard advocated the detached forts. The opposition attacked the latter plan with great vivacity, imputing to the authorities the design of using the forts in order to oppress Paris rather than to resist the foreigner. The treaty of London of July 15 obliged the Government to adopt an immediate resolution, and, on the report of Major Chabaud-Latour, the construction of the continuous enceinte was decided upon, in addition to detached forts. King Louis Philippe was inclined to think the forts sufficient for the defence of Paris. The Liberals who were in opposition, informed of the preference of the King, made daily attacks on the forts, and loudly demanded the enceinte; to which Louis Philippe at last consented, saying, 'I am well aware that in order to fortify Paris it is necessary to shout in the streets, "Down with Louis Philippe! Long live the enceinte!"'" The chief author of the fortifications was M. Thiers, who lived to see Paris invested by the Germans, and most of the detached forts very roughly handled, while the continuous enceinte sadly hampered the Parisians in their sorties. General Chabaud-Latour also witnessed this. M. Thiers also saw half the detached forts in the hands of the Germans, and the other half, with the exception of Mont Valerien, in the hands of the Communists. These latter forts he was obliged to besiege, while with Mont Valerien he pounded the Parisians. Now the detached forts of M. Thiers have been supplemented by other forts lying at a greater distance from the enceinte, as modern artillery could fire over the old forts into the heart of Paris.

Whilst the late Commander-in-Chief in China, Vice-Admiral G. O. Willes, had command of that station, he signalised himself by exercising the most rigid economy in every part of the Naval service out there, and succeeded in inducing the Admiralty to abolish in toto the Naval yard at Shanghai, to reduce the Victualling Depôt at Yokohama, and to withdraw the medical staff from the hospital at that place, leaving the duties to be performed by the medical officers of the ships in port. We now learn that these "economies" have proved, as is usually the case, to be more expensive in the long-run. Stores have now to be conveyed from Hong Kong to Shanghai in freight at heavy rates, and coal has to be bought in the market at the latter place at considerably advanced prices to what was the case when the yard was in existence there. Under these circumstances it is not surprising to hear that an intention prevails of rehabilitating this depôt. It was sold a couple of years back at a ridiculously low sum; it could not now be repurchased for treble the amount, and some difficulty will be experienced in obtaining an equally eligible site on which to establish a new Naval yard.

Prince and Princess Edward of Saxe-Weimar were entertained at luncheon in the Pavilion, Southsea, on Wednesday, by the Mayor of Portsmouth. The Mayor, in proposing the health of the Prince and Princess, said that they had both fully identified themselves with every movement for the benefit of the inhabitants of the town, on behalf of whom he presented Prince Edward with an illuminated address and the Princess with a crescent and star composed of diamonds, 65 in number, which could be worn as a bracelet, brooch, or hair-pin. His Serene Highness and his wife "have won golden opinions from all sorts of (good) men" and women during his term of command.

Applications for appointment of Naval schoolmasters to ships and notices of their discharge are to be made direct to the Inspector of Naval Schools. Naval schoolmasters are only to be borne in the Impregnable when at home ports, and they are to be discharged to that ship when requisite accordingly.

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

A class of 12 non-commissioned officers, from Cavalry and Infantry, have been instructed during the past month by Major C. L. Harvey in field sketching, reconnaissance, outpost duties, and minor tactics.

The spring instruction of the troops is proceeding with the utmost regularity. In June, July, and August, divisional field days on a modest scale, and minor operations, will take place two or three times a week.

The 85th will proceed to Woolwich next week to relieve the 62nd Wiltshire Regiment, ordered to Aldershot. The old King's Light Infantry have made many friends at Aldershot. The 85th will have reason to remember Aldershot as the station where the whistle and chain, which have been worn by their serjeants on the sash since 1802, was ordered to be removed, as being contrary to regulation.

A detachment of the Military Mounted Police will be encamped in the vicinity of Pirbright Camp.

Captain A. S. Griffiths, R.A., and W. B. M. Brand, 93rd Highlanders, have joined the garrison class which commenced on the 1st prox.

Surgeon-Major J. D. Edge, M.D., A.M.D., has been taken on the strength of the Division from the 5th inst.

Colonel A. H. Williams has rejoined from Shoeburyness.

Surgeon-Major Morgan has assumed charge of the Military Prison, North Camp.

Lieutenant Russell, R.E., and Quartermaster McCallum, A.H.C., are in readiness for foreign service.

Steps have been taken to prevent the further spread of scarlet fever.

The old pattern valise equipment has recently been supplied to the 3rd Battalion, Rifle Brigade, to replace equipment which had become unserviceable. Notwithstanding trials, experiments, and reports of Committees, it is probable that the present equipment will continue to be carried.

The Queen's Bays' regimental race meeting will take place on Thursday next.

Sir A. Alison has directed that the following course be followed:—(1.) To reinforce a company extended for attack in rank entire firing, with the whole of the supporting company.—The attacking company will be ordered, if halted under cover, to close on its centre to one pace; if advancing by rushes in the open, to close on its centre to the same interval on the move. The reinforcing company (being under fire, and, therefore already at two paces interval) will form rank entire and move up by half-companies at the double, on the outer flanks of the attacking company. (2.) When a partial reinforcement only is intended to replace losses in action.—The number of individual men, or files, in the attacking company intended to represent the losses will be ordered to lie down. When the company advances it will close to its centre, so as to have all its men in rank entire, at the regulated intervals (two paces to each man). The supporting company will extend to rank entire, with the usual interval, a number of men equal to that which has fallen out of the attacking company, and move them up on one or both flanks of the attacking company, as may be required. This will be done by entire sections when practicable. In any case, the men so moved up will be always under the orders of an officer or non-commissioned officer, or senior soldier of their own company. The men who fall out from the attacking company will join the supporting company when it reaches them.

We have received a copy of the official Russian Report on the trials made near St. Petersburg by order of Admiral Schestakoff, Minister of Marine, in February last, with the Nordenfelt 1½-in. shell-gun, and the Baranovsky, Engström, and Hotchkiss guns of the same calibre. The conclusions arrived at by the Committee after putting all the guns to the same tests are thus set out in the Report:—"1. The mechanism of the Nordenfelt gun is solid, very convenient, and simple. 2. The elevating and training wheels are very conveniently arranged for laying the gun. 3. The rapidity of fire, averaging 25 shots a minute, is much superior to the rapidity of fire of the Baranovsky, Engström, and Hotchkiss (one barrel) guns. 4. The accuracy of the Nordenfelt gun is very satisfactory, more especially so at long ranges (1,067 and 2,134 mètres). 5. The penetration of iron plates is greater than that of the Hotchkiss and Engström. Consequently, the Commission finds the Nordenfelt 1½-in. (37 millimètre) calibre-gun, firing solid projectiles as well as explosive shell of 17·8 pounds (850 grammes) weight, to be good; and all the more so that, during the whole of the experiments (during which 400 rounds were fired), the mechanism worked very well, and without hitch, delay, or accident, either to the gun or to the cartridges."

THE INFANTRY RIFLE.

After the Majuba Hill disaster, there being a feeling that the shooting of our Army was not as good as it ought to be, the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief proposed a Committee, to consider how it could be raised to a higher standard. Extracts from the report of the Committee on Musketry Instruction were presented to the Houses of Parliament in 1883, and give us all that was considered desirable to publish of their recommendations. The Committee urged that some changes should be made in the system of instruction, which they considered would in the end have the effect of raising the standard of shooting. From the fact that the troops which shot well at fixed targets did little execution on the field, the necessity for making the shooting less theoretical and more practical was apparent to all. However, this was not enough. A searching inquiry would have revealed that a very general cause of inaccurate shooting lay in the rifle itself. The position of the trigger in the Martini-Henry rifle—and this may be said also of the proposed new rifle—is so far forward that a man with short fingers cannot get the second joint of the forefinger round it, so as to exercise a steady pressure in discharging the rifle; and, as a very common defect in firing lies in the habit of pulling and not pressing the trigger, the forefinger in the act of discharging the rifle describes the arc of a circle, by which action the muzzle is diverted from the object aimed at. The present trigger not only causes this lateral motion of the muzzle in firing, but the backward pressure of the forefinger on it, particularly when the "pull off" is stronger than it should be, has the effect of elevating the muzzle. A practical shot, who fires a large number of rounds during the year, knows how to minimise these defects; but, putting aside that reasons of economy do not allow of our soldiers firing to the same extent, it is not to be expected that young soldiers, in the heat and turmoil of an action, with clouds of smoke hanging all round, will make the same allowances as a crack shot will make when firing under the most favourable conditions on a rifle range. It is really surprising that, notwithstanding the general recognition, in all armies alike, of the difficulty of securing accurate shooting on service under the present conditions, next to nothing should have yet been done to eliminate from the rifle itself an acknowledged disturbing cause to its effective use. Several inventors have certainly endeavoured to provide against it by the introduction of a thumb trigger, the striker being released by the pressure of the thumb; but the unquestionable advantages which such a reasonable alteration present appear not to have been fully valued up to the present moment. The attention of the Small Arm Factory at Enfield has lately been drawn to this thumb trigger, and, doubtless, this mode of discharging the rifle will be adopted in the new infantry fire-arm; nevertheless, as a certain period of time must necessarily elapse before any of these rifles are placed in the hands of our troops, it appears prudent to lose no time in introducing this desirable modification in the present rifle. That the Martini-Henry can be so altered has already been placed beyond doubt. The conversion of many thousands stands of arms will evidently cost a considerable sum of money, but the question of cost should not be allowed for a moment to stand in the way when the object to be attained, greater accuracy of fire on the field of battle, is so important. The necessity for issuing a new arm to our troops is after all not very pressing, and we might even willingly consent to see the issue postponed for a time, as a ready means for making the present rifle more effective is at hand. The question of improving the standard of efficiency in the shooting of our small army is a national one, and we here indicate a means for doing so, with a view to invite the attention of all interested in rifle shooting to what appears to be a very important modification of the rifle. Reasons of economy should not be allowed to prevail, more especially at the present moment, when it is impossible to close our eyes to the fact that in a few months we may find ourselves engaged in a military operation in which the enemy will probably be numerically superior to us.

TORPEDO-BOATS.

The important position now held by torpedo-boats in the Naval armaments of foreign Maritime Powers, has, we hope, not been lost sight of by the Admiralty. Germany, Russia, France, and Italy are, one and all, spending vast sums of money on the creation of a fleet of sea-going torpedo-boats. Already do France and Russia possess larger numbers of these small craft than does this country; and Germany has just ordered 70 first-class boats to be built. It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that the subject of torpedo-boat construction is attracting much attention in our Naval circles, nor that the theatre of the Royal United Service Institution should have been well filled yesterday by Naval officers anxious to hear this subject discussed, when Mr. Yarrow had read his most able and interesting paper on "Torpedo-boats." Capt. Lord Charles Beresford, R.N., introduced the lecturer, already well-known in Naval circles as the builder of some of the fastest torpedo-boats ever launched. Mr. Yarrow went straight to the kernel of his subject, avoiding any reference to the earlier history of the development of torpedo-boat warfare. He informed his audience that 100 torpedo-boats, each 75 ft. long by 16 ft. beam, were ordered by the Russian Government in 1877 for the Russo-Turkish war. These boats were all built in Russia from designs supplied by Mr. Yarrow. The rapidity with which these boats were built and launched in a country like Russia, which at that time possessed no industry capable of designing and constructing such craft, is evidence the most complete of the vast importance in which torpedo-boats were even then held by the Russians. Indeed, it may be said that it was owing to this fact that the torpedo-boat was recognised as forming a component part of Naval armaments from that day by all maritime nations. In this country we possess exceptional advantages as regards shipbuilding. So far as torpedo-boats are concerned, we have the well-known firms of Thorneycroft, Yarrow, and White of Cowes, who are able to construct these craft by the hundreds; and it will be a short-sighted policy if we neglect to maintain the advantage we thus possess over foreign nations. This can easily be done by the Admiralty showing undue partiality for one firm at the expense of the others; as then, in case of emergency, it would be necessary to suddenly increase our numerically weak fleet of torpedo-boats, and to supply the numbers deficient would be more than any single firm could accomplish. At present, nearly all the orders given out by the Admiralty for torpedo-boats are handed to the same firm, in which, strange to say, the son of the Chief Constructor at the Admiralty holds an important position. We do not mean for a moment to insinuate that the fact of his so doing can in any way have influenced the Admiralty to grant him all their orders, but at the same time, we think that were their Lordships' favours distributed a little more fairly among our best firms, that policy would tend far more to strengthen the resources of the country than could by any possibility the monopoly they have so far created and protected. Mr. Yarrow gave yesterday the number of coast defence torpedo-boats possessed by the Great Powers. Thus we find Russia heading the list with 115 torpedo-boats for 2,100 miles of sea-coast, or one boat to every 18 miles. France comes next, with 50 boats for 1,500 miles of coast, or one boat to every 30 miles. Next comes Italy, with 2,400 miles of coast and 18 boats, or one boat to every 153 miles. England has 3,100 miles of coast-line to defend, but she possesses but 19 of these boats, or one to every 197 miles. Were the Colonies included, England would only possess one coast defence torpedo-boat to every 800 miles of coast-line. It will thus be seen that the great Naval Power of the world ranks in the matter of torpedo boats after Russia, France, and Italy, and, at no distant date, Germany and other Powers will also be ahead of England. We have no space to follow Mr. Yarrow through his very interesting narrative of the development of high speed in torpedo-boats. In 1878 Mr. Yarrow built a first-class boat for the Admiralty, which attained a speed of 21·94 knots, or three knots more than had at that time been secured by any similar craft, and in 1880 he launched the Batoum for Russia. This was the first craft of its kind to make a long sea voyage, and so well did she perform her work that she became the type of a new class of torpedo-vessel. In 1881 a sister-boat to the Batoum, built for the Italian Government, attained the very high speed of 22·4 knots, the highest speed yet attained by any boat at an official trial. It is to Mr. Yarrow also that we are indebted for the invention whereby serious accidents are prevented should a boiler-tube burst, an accident which until then had frequently been attended with fatal results. This invention was at once adopted by all torpedo-boat builders, as also a device for preventing the steaming qualities of a torpedo-boat from being destroyed by reason of an influx of water into the stokehold compartment, an accident which might happen from collision, grounding, or the enemy's shot. The Yarrow auxiliary bow-rudder has also been of great service in materially improving the manœuvring of vessels running at high speed, and has been universally adopted; while Mr. Yarrow's apparatus for launching Whitehead torpedoes from the 2nd-class boats has been accepted by the Admiralty, and is now in use in the Navy. Strange to say, however, Mr. Yarrow has not built 10 per cent. of our torpedo-boats, over 90 per cent. of the craft having been launched by the favoured firm so nearly related to the Chief Constructor. In drawing attention to the fact, we do not desire to advocate the claims of one firm, or to detract from the well-known merits of another. We are merely desirous of securing to the Navy as large a field wherefrom to draw its matériel as possible, on the good old adage of not putting "all the eggs into one basket." The question of armoured torpedo-boats, and the use of electrical torpedo-boats, was also touched upon by Mr. Yarrow, as well as other improvements made and contemplated by his firm. Little was said, however, on the subject of turbine propulsion for these craft, owing to the fact, we presume, that Mr. Burnaby, who occupies a leading position in the firm of Messrs. Thorneycroft and Co., quite recently read an elaborate paper on the subject; and apparently not wishing to trench on this gentleman's work, Mr. Yarrow contented himself with alluding to the result of the experiments made by Mr. Burnaby, holding out, however, no very sanguine hopes that high speeds will ever be attained by means of the turbine.

MADRAS ARMY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The Madras Army List, published on April 1, 1884, shows the following to be the establishment of the officers of the Madras Army:—Madras Staff Corps: 1 lieutenant-general, 6 major-generals, 17 lieutenant-colonels, with colonels' allowances, 214 lieutenant-colonels, 66 majors, 37 captains, 110 lieutenants, 76 probationers. The Local Madras Cavalry Officers: 12 lieutenant-colonels, 13 majors. Local Madras Infantry Officers:—26 colonels, 24 lieutenant-colonels. Infantry Officers under the new conditions (1859): 41 majors. Unattached List: 1 major. Here is a glorious state of things! To fully appreciate it, it must be remembered that the Madras Army consists of 4 regiments of cavalry and 32 regiments of infantry, and that only 8 European officers are allowed to any one regiment.—I am, &c., A MADRAS OFFICER.

The Army.

6TH DRAGOONS. The Pinetown correspondent of the Times of Natal writes on March 22:—"A very handsome and costly brass tablet, in memory of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men who have died in the colony, is to be erected in the cathedral at Maritzburg. Two deaths by drowning have occurred (Pte. J. Bowie and Pte. J. Summerfield), and Pte. J. King lost his life through the kick of a horse. The following list shows how heavily enteric fever has laid its hand on the regiment:—Orderly-room-Serjt. J. Dalton, Farrier-Serjt. H. Hogg, Serjt. E. Sparrow, Shoeing-smith F. Hardiman, Lance-Corpl. G. Paris, Ptes. J. Birkett, J. Donohue, G. Gilbert, E. Gilbert, W. Cunningham, W. Hollis, W. James, J. Leftwich, J. Maddon, C. W. Marsden, J. Milward, A. Parsons, C. Pullingar, H. Shaw, F. Smith, W. Starkey, W. Stone, H. Taylor, T. Tinger, H. Trowbridge, R. White, D. S. Williams, G. Wordsworth, and E. Young. Surg.-Major Scanlan has been compelled to take a short leave of absence. Capt. Tey has resumed duty."

10TH HUSSARS. The Civil and Military Gazette observes:—"The staying power of the Egyptian horses on which our cavalry were mounted at El Teb has excited a great deal of surprise. They went through all the fatigue of the advance, and were severely exercised during the three-and-a-half hours that the fighting lasted. From 12 o'clock till 2, in the worst heat of the day, they were constantly on the move, galloping backwards and forwards through the enemy. In this country some sympathy has been wasted on the 10th Hussars, because they had not the supposed advantage of riding their own horses. In reality they were extremely fortunate, as anyone who observed the conditions of cavalry service in the late Egyptian Campaign will affirm. The light, wiry, little native horses appear to skim over the sand like deer, where our chargers plough along in the most painful manner, and exhaust themselves in an extremely short space of time. Serviceable and enduring, however, as the Egyptian horse undoubtedly is, he presents a miserable contrast in appearance to the magnificent creature which, according to the English illustrated journals, bears the Arab fanatic to death or victory."

13TH HUSSARS. Mrs. Stevenson, wife of Major Stevenson, will officiate as Lady-in-Waiting to the Duchess of Connaught during the absence in England of Lady Downe.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Jackson's Woolwich Journal says:—"Capt. MacMahon, instructor at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, has invented a yet more abstruse form of higher mathematics, and has thereby brought himself into enviable distinction. His fame is recorded in the current annals of the Royal Artillery Institution, wherein the committee of that Institution report with satisfaction that Professor Cayley, one of the greatest living mathematicians, had devoted six out of a course of nine lectures at Cambridge University to the explanation of Capt. MacMahon's researches in semivariants and symmetric functions—a high honour which is believed to be without precedent in the University."

Lieut.-Col. E. Blackwell has been appointed Camp Commandant at Hay during gun practice this year.

The N Baty., 1st Brig., left Portsmouth on Tuesday in the Assistance, and will be stationed at Kilkenny. She will return with the 7th Brig., which will train at Gosport.

The following officers, arranged according to seniority, passed the final examination of the ninth advanced class in March last:—Capts. A. W. Anstruther (honours), armour-plates; W. N. Lockyer (honours), armour-plates, and explosives and small-arms; A. P. Penton (honours), steam and mechanism, armour-plates, and Royal Arsenal departments; R. A. Rigg; F. W. Boteler (honours), chemistry, heat and electricity, steam and mechanism, armour-plates, and Royal Arsenal departments.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

A telegram from Suakim says:—"Major Chermside has been appointed Governor."

Col. Fraser, of the Egyptian Army, has left for England.

COLDSTREAM GUARDS. The 1st Batn. returned on Monday from Aldershot.

14TH WEST YORKSHIRE REGIMENT. Major Hutchison, 2nd Batn., has taken over the duties of Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. for Musketry at Simla, on appointment, and is about to be seconded.

20TH LANCASHIRE FUSILIERS. Lieut. Owen, 2nd Batn., is, it is said, to be appointed to the personal staff of the Indian Viceroy.

25TH KING'S OWN BORDERERS. Writing from Umballa on April 2, a correspondent says:—"The 2nd Cheshire Regt. marched in on March 27, and occupied the lines of the King's Own Borderers, who had been for the last few days under canvas. Half the Cheshire Regt. goes to the hills, and the King's Own Borderers deserted us for the same pleasant destination on the afternoon of March 28."

37TH HAMPSHIRE REGIMENT. Major Dunn, adjutant 2nd Hants R.V., and Major Gardner, 12th Regt., adjutant 1st Cambridge R.V., exchanges.

42ND BLACK WATCH (ROYAL HIGHLANDERS). Capt. Maxwell, Assist. Commandant of the Military Police in Egypt, who has been serving in Cairo, has assumed duty at Alexandria on the Staff of Major-Gen. Earle.

48TH NORTHAMPTONSHIRE REGIMENT. It is stated that the regiment will be moved to Parkhurst.

ROYAL MARINES.

Brevet Major Craigie, lately serving in the Invincible, has been permitted to resign his commission.

A court-martial, under the presidency of Col. Thomas (Col. Blake, D.J.A.), has been sitting at Chatham to inquire into certain charges against an officer stationed at Hull.

A second medal for long service and good conduct has been awarded to Serjt. Henry Hart, 17th Compy., R.M.L.I., master shoemaker, Chatham Division, on completion of 42 years' service in the corps.

The under-mentioned privates have been awarded the medals for long service and good conduct, viz.:—William Bloyce, 39th Compy., and Herbert Swain, 40th Compy., R.M.L.I.

Capt. and Brevet Major E. J. W. Noble, R.M.A., Staff officer, has proceeded on six weeks' leave of absence.

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. The 3rd Batn. was to have left Suakim on Thursday in the Orontes. Major M. M. Fortescue, late of the regiment, died at Gunnersbury on the 2nd inst., aged 47 years.

62nd Wiltshire Regiment proceeds on Tuesday next from Woolwich to Aldershot.

69th Welsh Regiment. It is reported from Cairo that Capt. Humphreys met with a severe accident on the racecourse. At the Londonderry City Petty Sessions the other day, the Mayor said:—"Before the business of the Court begins, I think it my duty as Mayor to say that the magistrates who regularly attend the petty sessions with me, and who are mainly responsible for the peace of the city, cannot allow the 2nd Batn. of the Welsh Regiment to leave the city without expressing regret at their transfer. They have, during their stay here, been several times called out to assist the civil powers in preserving the peace, although happily they have not been required to act. The officers have on these occasions shown their anxiety to act with the magistrates, and the men have always readily responded to the call of duty. During the time they were here the men have conducted themselves in the most exemplary manner,—more so than any regiment I ever remember in the city."

72nd Seaforth Highlanders. It is stated that the 1st Batn. will move to Fort George. The battalion will probably be relieved by the 48th Foot.

79th Cameron Highlanders. Mr. W. McC. Fairie, formerly of the regiment, died at Bycullah Park, Enfield, on the 25th ult., aged 60 years.

82nd South Lancashire Regiment. The funeral of Capt. and Qrmr. Slade, who died on Friday after a brief illness, took place at the Stoke Cemetery on Tuesday, with military honours. The pall-bearers were Capts. Kellie, Purchas, Synge, and Lieut. Elliott.

85th King's (Shropshire Light Infantry) moves from Aldershot to Woolwich on Tuesday next.

91st Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. When we heard from Natal, the regiment was distributed as follows:—Head-quarters, under Lieut.-Col. Robley, at Pietermaritzburg; one camp, B (Lieut. Johnston), at Durban; and one, H (Capt. Robbins), at Etchowe. E Compy., Major Mills (in command), with Lieuts. Middlemass, Richardson, and Aytoun, with E and D, the mounted infantry compys., were to have proceeded to Etchowe from Pietermaritzburg, arriving about April 16. Capt. Bridgman, Storrar Smith, Toller, Langdon, Bridge, Collard, Ward, and Creagh; Capts. Bunbury, Lea, Clayton, Pollock, and Silvester; Messrs. Hardy, Carpenter, Dalton, Phillips, Bendall, and Dean.

Pay Department. The Times says:—"The Department continues to be short of candidates, several districts and not a few regiments being still without their proper financial officers. A new warrant is accordingly about to be issued for the purpose of adding to the attractions of the Department, both to those already serving in it and to those combatant officers who may meditate becoming paymasters. Under one of its provisions, regimental officers who have completed seven years' service (instead of ten, as at present), who may be found qualified on probation, will be eligible for the position of paymaster, and they will have the option, as in the case of the Commissariat, of rejoining their corps as combatants up to a certain time—probably five years. It is expected that this change will have the effect of obtaining many applicants from among the subalterns of the Army. It is also understood that the privilege of retiring on a pension after 20 years' service will be given, that the rank of lieutenant-colonel will be bestowed upon Staff paymasters after five years' service in that position, that a corps of paymaster clerks will be formed, and that, as in the case of the other departments of the Army, the officers of the Pay branch will be eligible for the Military, instead of, as now, only the Civil Division of the Order of the Bath." It has been officially notified that candidates for the Pay Department will, on the termination of their probation, be examined before a Board composed, when practicable, of the Chief Paymaster of the District, and two officers of the Army Pay Department. A combatant officer may be substituted for one of the latter if more convenient; but, in that case, the officer should have some knowledge of regimental accounts. The points generally upon which candidates shall be tested are:—The examination of Company Pay Lists, posting in General Account Book and Ledger, abstracting of debits and credits for Proof of Regimental Pay List, preparation of balance-sheets, and of monthly estimates. They will also be examined as to their acquaintance with the Pay Warrant, Allowance Regulations, Financial Instructions, and Savings Bank Regulations, as to their knowledge of book-keeping by double entry (to the extent required by Army accounts), the duties attending the payment of soldiers, aptitude for accounts, quickness at figures, neatness in work, and general intelligence and ability. The proceedings of the Board will be accompanied by any special observations which the Board may see fit to make regarding a candidate's qualifications for the duties of a Paymaster.

GORDON'S EXODUS.

A correspondent who has served in Egypt sends us the following suggestions:—"1. Let a balloon corps for service in Egypt be at once established. There will be no lack of volunteers for this business, and no abler man to conduct it could be found than Major Elsdale, now Superintendent of the School of Military Ballooning at Chatham. Officers of the Regular Army would be found who have had previous experience in ballooning in an amateur way which would now come in useful. An officer whose experience in ballooning is very great is Major Templer, of the 7th Battalion, the King's Royal Rifle Corps, and whose experiences would be invaluable. The corps should be, as I said, at once formed, as time presses; should be instructed under Major Elsdale for one month at Chatham, and then despatched to Egypt for further instruction in that climate. 2. As regards the operations, the greatest difficulty would be the transport—water transport particularly. We cannot conceal from ourselves that, in spite of the trouble and talent exercised to form Sir Evelyn Wood's army, its utility as a fighting-power is not what it ought to be. Why not employ it as a transport corps? Its experience as a fighting unit would make it independent almost entirely of other escort. From 2,000 to 3,000 camels would have to be employed, and for these native drivers must be employed; and no man understands a camel so well as an Egyptian Arab. 3. To each infantry regiment I would suggest the issue of two Gatling guns, and that 30 men in each regiment be instructed and told off to these guns; but that the guns, except in cases of extreme emergency, be never separated from the regiment. 4. That the officers commanding companies in the infantry regiments be mounted for the campaign. They could thus better direct the movements of their men, and would not be so liable to come into personal contact with the enemy, and if he did he would have the advantage; for, no doubt, though it is the ardent wish of every British officer to be at the front, it should be borne in mind that his life is useful, and we cannot afford to lose officers in engagements so freely as we have done of late."

THE TERRIBLE TARTANS.

"Inquirer" says:—"In the last number of your journal you invite authentic information regarding the origin of the various tartans. It would be very interesting if information could also be forthcoming of the time of the introduction of the kilt into Scotland. The Gaelic or Celtic inhabitants of Scotland are, as is well known, of Irish descent, their ancestors having crossed over in the early centuries of our era from the opposite coast of Antrim, then called Dalriada, a name which it still retains in a corrupted form. The kilt was never an article of dress of the Irish; like other Celtic races, their characteristic garment was the trius, i.e., trowsers or pantaloons, in Latin, braccæ, hence they were designated by the Romans gentes braccati. Ancient specimens of these garments, discovered in bogs, may be seen in the Museum of the Royal Irish Academy in Dublin. When, then, was the kilt adopted in Scotland? Some years ago the question was slightly discussed in Notes and Queries, but not conclusively settled."

HIGHLAND REGIMENTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—Your correspondent "Chameleon" is quite right. The old kilted regiments, the Greys and the 71st, were for many years the only corps composed entirely, or with rare exceptions, of Scotchmen, and it took them all their time to keep themselves national. The number of regiments now pretending to recruit north of the Tweed makes it impossible for any of them to succeed. It is more difficult to raise men in the North, particularly in the Highlands, now than in 1809, when so many regiments had to give up recruiting exclusively in Scotland, and, therefore, to discontinue the Highland dress. It would have been far better to have had a Highland Brigade of, say, six battalions, dressed alike, but combining the honours and local interest of the regiments composing it. That could be well kept up as a reality, and the other regiments with Scotch titles would still be what they were for very many years,—merely connected with Scotland. The majority of the men in the five old kilted battalions and in the 71st are still, however, Scotchmen, and probably most of that majority born north of the Forth.—I am, &c.,

Army & Navy Gazette.
LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1884.

IN our last number there was an announcement, which will be confirmed presently, that the Government intend, should circumstances render it necessary, to equip an expedition for the relief or rescue of General Gordon at Khartoum. For some time past the authorities at the Horse Guards and the officers of the Intelligence Department have been in correspondence on the subject, and instructions have been sent out to Egypt to obtain all possible information respecting the routes from the Red Sea, whether by Abyssinia or Suakim, to the Nile; but the general tendency of the demands for information points to the growing conviction, as we are happy to believe, in the minds of the authorities, that the safest and best route, if not the only one, is by the Nile itself, from end to end. There may be, of course, short cuts at certain points across the Desert, but these must be dependent on the relations established with the tribes, and on the provision which can be made for transport and supplies of water and other necessaries. The evidence that the Government are preparing an expedition, or rather, are taking measures to facilitate operations the moment they are feasible and necessary, is ample. Naval officers have been employed to collect information which, being official, could be relied upon concerning the Nile and its depths; but the Cairo authorities could have found quite handy, at Boulak, any number of one-eyed old Arabs who could have told them to an inch all they required to know on that point. The nucleus of a depôt of camels has been formed by the collection of 500 of these animals at Assouan. Sir Evelyn Wood's Aide-de-Camp, Major Stuart Wortley, Major Kitchener, and Captain Rundle have been sent up the river from Cairo to explore the Desert routes. Colonel Ardagh is presiding over the labours of a committee to consider and report upon the best means of storing and supplying water. It is strange that Lord Wolseley should have found such difficulty in obtaining accurate information respecting the navigation, if so it may be called, of the Nile between Dongola, Berber, Abou Hamed, &c.; but the fact is that English travellers have generally gone by the short cuts across the Desert, which up to the time of our unfortunate interference were much safer than the Thames Embankment. Therefore, when he applied to travellers or missionaries respecting transport by water, they could afford him little or no information. But at all considerable native villages—and they exist from Wady Halfa to Khartoum—by the banks of the river, there are to be found, so to speak, pilots, or reises, acquainted with every foot of river navigation, each in his own district, for the river is covered with fleets of boats, from the large dahabeeah of the Lower Nile to the small noggah; and these, when the river is high, can navigate it with perfect ease, even at the so-called "cataracts,"—the first, at Assouan, presenting perhaps, the greatest difficulties to vessels proceeding upwards, on account of the strength of the current the second, at Wady Halfa, being the most difficult, by reason of the rocks—but with the aid of the Sheiks and plenty of backsheesh for the natives, the largest dahabeeahs can be hauled up when there is sufficient water. The so-called cataracts between the Second Cataract and Khartoum—more probably shallows and rapids—present no real obstacle. But in the midst of these preparations, there is a dark cloud rising up in the Valley of the Nile. At the present moment, notwithstanding disheartening rumours, the country is, in reality, peaceful enough. Of course, if gaols are emptied, criminals let loose upon the world will return to their old trade in the neighbourhood of the large towns; and robberies and crimes and violence will be rife especially where the police is disorganised; but generally there is, we think, more apprehension of a panic sort than is really warranted; and the offences which are reported are made the most of by those who desire to force the Government to declare a Protectorate, as the "be-all and end-all" for the salvation of Egypt. Here is the cloud of which we speak. The population is at present engaged in saving the crops, and in the labour of the harvest. They are too busy to think of the Mahdi or to hearken to his emissaries. But in a few weeks—say, a month more—their labours will be terminated; there comes upon the whole land enforced idleness, till the rising Nile summons all the population to arms in order to battle with the waters and to convert them into fertilising canals. In this interval of repose there may be great danger from a popular outbreak. The people who inhabit the banks of the river from Siout southwards differ greatly from the timid fellaheen of the Delta, and if the fire of insurrection catches these excitable and half-savage races, the difficulties in the way of a Nile Expedition may become formidable indeed.

As Lord Hartington is apparently so badly "posted" by the proper military authorities, it is a pity he does not visit Aldershot occasionally. His lordship is supposed to represent the Army in the House of Commons. Had he been at Aldershot on Friday, the 25th ult., he would probably have regretted his statement in the House that "mixed guards are never permitted." It so happens that this practice is of frequent occurrence at Aldershot. On Friday, the 25th, the contrast between two stalwart Highlanders and four diminutive riflemen on guard together was really too ludicrous, and created general amusement among the troops passing them. The whole strength of the infantry garrison at Aldershot at a field-day on the day in question, when every man capable of carrying arms was in the field, amounted to only 2,800 men, and this in our biggest garrison. How are facts such as these to be reconciled with the roseate assurance of after-dinner speakers that the British Army never was so strong and never was so efficient as it is to day?

The War Office has decided to remove to half-pay all those Lieutenant-Colonels of Artillery borne on the Indian Lists who have, since October 1, 1877, completed five years' service in that rank, and those Majors with seven years similarly situated. This will give a large flow of promotion at once on the old list.

We hear that Colonel E. Markham is likely to resign the command of the Artillery at Gibraltar, in consequence of ill-health.

"Indeed, looking to the general character of recruiting in Scotland," says the Times of Monday last, "it is clear that of the 19 battalions associated with that country, a considerable proportion can be considered Scotch only in name." This unfortunate truth has been over and over again indicated; but if the Scotch dress be useful, ornamental, and national, there is no reason why it should not be worn much more largely. For Cavalry, however, it would not, we presume, be considered altogether appropriate by the most ardent Highlander, nor even suitable for the Horse Artillery, the Army Hospital Corps, or the sappers and miners of Engineers.

Lieutenant-Colonel W. S. Curzon and G. B. Hobart obtain the Horse Artillery jackets vacant in A and B Brigades.

Major D. D. T. O'Callaghan, R.A., from Assistant-Superintendent of Experiments at Shoeburyness, has been appointed to the Department of the Director of Artillery from the 1st inst., vice Major A. W. White, R.A., whose period of Staff service has expired.

Major A. W. White, R.A., has been placed on the Staff of the School of Gunnery from the 1st inst., for employment at Aldershot as Instructor in Gunnery, vice Major E. Bainbridge, R.A.

The Commandant at Netley, Colonel T. L. Ball, will in future be included on the Staff of the Southern District as an Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General.

The jubilation in the inspired organs over the enlistment in local Line battalions is confined to the "tendency in men to enlist in them which seems to be steadily increasing in many localities." We cannot make out what the Times means when it cites several corps "which seem to be almost, if not exclusively, replenished from the counties to which they belong," as the illustrations afford no support to the remark, supposing the battalions to be at regular strength. A man may prove anything by figures, but it would be hard to get a demonstration that the Army is in a satisfactory condition out of the statement by the Times, to support the Government, which appeared on the eve of the discussion in the House of Commons of the details of the Army Estimates.

Lieutenant J. B. S. Stracey, Scots Guards, has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to Major-General Gipps, commanding the Home District, provisionally.

Major E. Bainbridge, R.A., succeeds Major C. H. F. Ellis, R.A., as Secretary of the Ordnance Committee at the War Office.

We have reason to believe that it is the intention of the Government to despatch an Expedition for the relief of Khartoum in July. It is not known yet for certain upon whom the command will devolve.

The absolutely defenceless condition of Singapore, one of our principal coaling stations in the Eastern seas, is being made use of to press on the Government the urgent necessity for the introduction into Parliament, without further delay, of the Bills for a loan for placing our principal home and foreign seaports in a state of defence.

The most interesting speech to the services at the Royal Academy dinner was—saving the Duke of Cambridge's presence—that of Sir Cooper Key, whose reference to the important step taken by the Australian Colonies at this particular juncture was tolerably significant. The Naval Lord pointed out that the great Australian Colonies, though very fond of us, their parents, are still alive to the necessity of fighting on their own hook, or in other words, of "aiding in their own protection;" and that Victoria, which already possesses an ironclad of considerable power, has, therefore, during the last year fitted out a small squadron of vessels of the latest type, well-built, armed, equipped, officered and manned, the basis of operations of which is to be Melbourne. Sir Cooper Key said with reason that there were some blessings in war and some horrors in a long peace; but we really cannot agree with the notion, even in an after-dinner speech, that, no matter what the materials of our ships may be, our Navy must ever maintain its reputation. Admiral Cooper Key, if he were in one of those paste-board vessels or wooden ships which are placed in the speech as alternatives to iron or steel, would not, we presume, venture to run alongside an ironclad manned by Japanese or Chinamen. However, it seems inevitable that there shall be a certain amount of bunkum in the speeches of those who return thanks for the services on occasions of this kind, and the worst of it is, that the officers who speak on behalf of their brethren in arms generally cover themselves with some of the butter they spread over their friends. The Duke of Cambridge made a remark which, truism as it is, may be repeated without offence to the service over which he presides. "The Army in this country," said his Royal Highness, "could be of very little use without the cordial and hearty support of the Navy." But, on the other hand, his Royal Highness might have well observed that the Navy would be of very little use without an army in securing our foreign possessions, and in the ports where the Navy refits, and which serve as bases for its operations in peace and in war.

On the 16th, at 3 p.m., Sir E. Hamley is to read a paper, at the Royal United Service Institute, on the recent approach of Russia to the frontiers of India. The nature of the subject and the reputation of the lecturer should invite a numerous and interested audience; and we may expect a very practical and instructive discussion. It is, however, more easy to indicate the evil than point out certain specific remedies which can be applied at our will and pleasure.

A correspondent in Egypt writes:—"As to this country there is very little to say. Mr. Gladstone, aided by Europe and the Press, has succeeded in two years the complete ruin of Egypt,—a work which could not be accomplished in 60 years by half a dozen Pashas, and all the traders, commission agents, jobbers, and money-lenders of the world. I have no idea what Ismail thinks now; but his coming here only to take Tewfik's place as a mere machine, to sign decrees and such things, would be quite useless. Give him an army of 10,000 men and no war correspondents, and within a month after his landing the whole of Egypt to Wady Halfa will be quiet; and by November or December, Eastern Soudan, Berber, and Khartoum will be in his power and quite safe,—not through his prestige, but because he knows how to treat the people."

If we had any doubt in our minds as to the course to be followed on any question in which Sir Alexander Hamilton Gordon, K.C.B., &c., was engaged, it would be our bounden duty, in order to arrive at a right decision, to take that side to which he was opposed; and, therefore, when he urges upon the Government the propriety of continuing the recent practice of secrecy in regard to regimental returns respecting punishments for crime, however we might be inclined to think it desirable, the fact that Sir A. Gordon "hoped that there would be no attempt to publish the returns" would convince us that they ought to be published. It is not at all surprising that the General, to whose mismanagement and incompetence much of the misery and suffering endured by the Army which was sent to the Crimea to carry on the war into which Lord Aberdeen permitted the nation to drift, should be found imputing to commanding officers in the Army conduct which would expose gentlemen to something more severe than contempt from their associates. He would, it seems, have no returns at all of confidential communications, true Liberal as he is, in which secrecy might cloak falsehood or malice. He tells the House of Commons that commanding officers now are induced to put down crimes as being of much more mild character than they really are. Major-General Alexander Gordon took a different ground of objection. But it was one which we can scarcely stand with him. He too, objected to the publication of the crime returns regimentally, on the strange pretext, coming from one who has been an officer in command, that the effect would induce commanding officers to deal with offences instead of referring them to courts-martial. We fear, however, that the information which is already published may furnish some excuse for an officer, jealous of the good reputation of the Foot Guards, to dissent from the recommendation that publicity may be given to the court-martial returns, so that good regiments should not be confounded with bad. There is, however, in the peculiar circumstances among which the Guards are placed, ample excuse for the difference shown between them and the Line Regiments not exposed to similar temptations.

Captain Luckraft desires to acknowledge through our columns his heartfelt appreciation of the tribute paid by brother officers and other kind friends to the memory of his late dear son, Charles Moore, in the erection of a window in the parish church of St. John's, at Lewes.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS, Etc.

MAJOR H., Aldershot.—Thanks for field-state last week, and paragraph of local news.

M. B.—We do not profess to answer questions from Hanwell. What do you mean by the "Naval Brigade of Athens"? We recommend you to use Lord Levat's "mourning ring" for your ears. There are many earrings worn by men in the Royal Navy, but they are not "uniform."

STAFF CORPS.—We cannot explain why "R." does not appear in the Army List to the names of officers of the Staff Corps and Local Services who have received the Distinguished-service Reward.

INFANTRY OF THE LINE CAPTAIN.—We do not see how you can make a grievance out of the permission to wear every-day trousers at mess, when the officers of other corps and apartments are obliged to wear full-dress trousers. It cannot be very galling to your legs, especially as they are, for the most of the time, under the mess-table; and we really consider the complaint that your full-dress trousers are becoming tarnished and out of date in your chest of drawers, as bordering on the sublimity of querulousness.

E. T. A.—Your questions are absurd. How could such an Act under the circumstances be "compulsory"? Clause 13, Sec. 3, does not apply to Volunteers when on what you call "their daily capacities."

"X."—It is not the intention to second the officers to whom you allude, as they were lent under special circumstances. You must be aware that there is a great probability of the force being disbanded.

TRADESMAN.—The regiment will not return.

 We must hold over letters, &c., this week on the Tartan from Lord A. Campbell and other interesting correspondence.

ERRATUM.—The name of the piece from which "Not a Word" is taken should have been given as "Le Carnaval d'un Merle Blanc."

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—OLD WOUNDS, SORES, AND ULCERS.—Daily experience confirms the fact which has triumphed over opposition for more than forty years—viz., that no means are known equal to Holloway's remedies for curing bad legs, sores, wounds, diseases of the skin, erysipelas, abscesses, burns, scalds, and, in truth, all cases where the skin is broken. To cure these infirmities quickly is of primary importance, as the compulsory confinement indoors weakens the general health. The ready means of cure are found in Holloway's Ointment and Pills, which heal the sores and expel their cause. In the very worst cases the Ointment has succeeded in effecting a perfect cure after every other means has failed of giving any relief. Desperate cases best display its virtues.

EGYPTIAN NEWS.

Cairo, April 26, 1884.

The month that has passed since I last wrote has been one in which the din of arms has been drowned in the noisy turmoil of an Egyptian political crisis. At least, such would have been my impression, had I not received the comforting assurance from her Majesty's Ministers that there has been no crisis, no resignation, no personal question, and, by implication at least, that all in Egypt was going as merrily as a marriage bell. In the face of such authoritative statements, it may perhaps seem ridiculous on my part to attempt any account of what "we thought" had happened. Still, if merely to show the exuberant fancy of residents at Shepheards', it may be worth while to recount our wild impressions. We thought, then, that Nubar, between whom and Mr. Clifford Lloyd there has long been a growing antagonism, had taken advantage of the absence of the latter in Cairo, not, indeed, to resign, but to do what was indeed a very different thing,—to threaten his resignation; that Sir Evelyn Baring, fearing that the whole coach might be suddenly upset, had arranged a temporary compromise, and had posted off to London to consult on the advisability either of getting a new driver, new horses, or, it might be, a new coach altogether. Supposing that all this had been so, it would not have been difficult to account for the look of placid tranquillity which has again reseated itself upon the expressive features of Nubar. Summing up the whole position, he might be inclined to think that he had played a difficult hand well, that he still held the leading trump, and that, sure of the trick, he ran a fair chance of running out with honours. Supposing, I say, that all this had happened! I think my estimate of the wily old Armenian would, intellectually speaking, have increased. It was a difficult hand that he undertook to play early this year; it required him to swallow a good deal that rather stuck in his throat. Abandonment of the Soudan sounded so well, and meant so much or so little, according to the way you looked at it! Still, Cherif jibbed at it,—that was the point. For a long time Nubar had been watching Cherif in despair; his rival's capacity of swallow had seemed to him enormous; pill after pill was carefully prepared for him, and every little string that Nubar knew how to pull was worked to show how fatal the effects of such a pill would be; but Cherif, if he had not blind faith in all the new specifics, had made up his mind to swallow a good deal, till Nubar began to lose hope. At last came the order, "Abandon Khartoum." Cherif hesitated; and Nubar, who had been shocked at first by the bare suggestion, recognised that it might be the salvation of the country. If not—well, it brought him to office, and that was an object almost as sacred. But then, he was to be a dummy; that, too, was hard,—to be chosen because more pliable than Cherif; but he consoled himself with a proverb, and waited. Once in office, it did not take him long to realise the position. Two months, during which the simplicity of the dove was somewhat too apparent; during which, with almost too much unction, he described himself as the useful grease to lubricate the English wheels of administration; and by the end of that time Nubar knew a good deal more than Blue-books and newspapers had told him, and he had a very fair idea as to the length of tether upon which he could depend. He realised, in fact, that behind Sir Evelyn Baring was by no means a united Cabinet, prepared to carry out Sir Evelyn's ideas. That ascertained, it remained only to choose the battle ground; and first, it was well both to try his strength and regain, if he could, a little reputation in the country. The question as to the wholesale dismissal of employés was the first point upon which he fought, and he won his preliminary skirmish malgré Baring and Vincent. That done, the next thing was to come more directly to the point. The question must be decided as to whether he or the English were to be the dummies. A less able man would have wasted his strength at small game, not so Nubar. Mr. Clifford Lloyd was a man who, for Nubar's purpose, was possessed of inestimable advantages; his position had necessarily made him enemies. So it would have done if he had been an angel of sweetness and light. As it was, he was not precisely either. Moreover, he was a person in attacking whom he could be always sure of some allies in the English House of Commons. On the other hand, he was strongly allied to Baring, but this was a difficulty which only required time to surmount. The very first step was to profess an intense feeling of affection for "ce bon Clifford"; he was so enthusiastic, so thorough, so everything, that he had all Nubar's sympathy! Unfortunately, his colleagues were not like himself, and he continually had to trouble Sir Evelyn with little difficulties which had arisen. First it was from one quarter, then from another, and all the little differences were carefully placed before Sir Evelyn for his solution, because Nubar was so determined that "ce cher Clifford" should be supported. Gradually, perhaps, Sir Evelyn began to think that he was too "dear," but Nubar would not hear of it. One Minister after another was displaced, so that nothing should be left untried; and in each case the same little difficulties seemed to occur, and to demand arrangement at the hands of Baring. There is a point at which your dearest friend may be rendered loathsome by over-insistance on his virtues, accompanied by continual request of loans on his behalf. And, reluctantly, Nubar seemed to lose heart; he became depressed, shook his head, "was afraid," and so forth, until at last a mutual friend confided in the strictest confidence to Baring that Nubar, harassed by these continual complaints against Lloyd, had asked the Khedive to relieve him from the pains of office. Unscrupulous people reported that it was a personal question. Words could not express the grief, the indignation, of Nubar at the charge. What tears could do they did; and who could resist the pleading of this kind, sympathetic, genial old man, who, grasping your hand, and telling you that he loved Lloyd like a brother, begged to be relieved of the pain of opposing him? There was, indeed, a brief moment, two painful days, when he began to fear that he might be taken at his word; then, indeed, his protestations became frantic; he was going, whether Lloyd remained or not. But gradually calm stole over him, the little attempt to get Abdelkader in his place had fallen through; there was nothing between Nubar and annexation, and he felt secure. I need hardly tell you the other scenes in the farce. Of course, the Ulema, and the notables, and the sheiks, one and all, begged and implored him to remain. Of course, at last he did so, and Sir Evelyn left for England. Nubar reigns supreme,—decidedly a well-played hand. But why should I occupy your space with the triviality of politics, amid the triumphal entry of victorious heroes from Suakim? Frankly, because even the demoralising spectacle of a political crisis in Cairo is less depressing than that of the return of troops who deserved, if any men ever did, the welcome due to those who have bravely struggled under adversity. Nor was there any wish in Cairo to grudge them their honours. The little enthusiasm that the small English colony could show was freely offered; but it is ill piping when there is no dancing. No amount of favour upon one side will produce an effect, unless there is some kindred feeling to excite on the other; and as the Black Watch trooped past silently, with dismal, weary tread, the cheers died away, or came spasmodically, like minute guns, and, except for the few who had special reason for joy, there settled a deep gloom over Cairo,—a gloom which has by no means yet been removed, but which, perhaps, is intensified by the apprehensions of a summer campaign in the Soudan. To all which it is owing, perhaps, that we hear rather more than we should like foreigners to hear of difficulties, hardships, and impossibilities connected with the past and future campaigns. Certainly, no one with any knowledge of African desert sun in July would ever urge with a light heart that British troops should march to Khartoum; and it is clearly right that those who have the experience, and those whose advice is asked, should state frankly those difficulties—or, if it be so, those impossibilities—without regard to false ideas of military honour. But I should like to hear a little less on the subject from officers who may be called on at any moment themselves to take the field, and whose responsibilities are rather to their men than to their superiors.

MACHINE-GUNS IN THE SOUDAN.

A distinguished officer, who held a high command in the Soudan, and who was present at El Teb and Tamai, has kindly placed at our disposal the following notes regarding the performance of the machine-guns. The views expressed by our correspondent are, we believe, held by Sir William Hewett and Commander Rolfe, who have, we understand, sent in their reports on the subject to the Admiralty:—"With reference to the machine-guns used in both actions, I should say that the Gatling, as at present supplied, is not a good or desirable weapon in the field. The cartridge is very liable to jamb, and, as a matter of fact, did jamb on several occasions. When the gun is thus disabled in the face of the enemy, it takes a very cool head to clear it. The Gatling has not sufficient range. Compared with the Gardner, the latter is an infinitely superior weapon; but it, too, has its faults and drawbacks. The chief faults of the Gardner are:—1. The extreme length of the feeder, which stands high above the gun, with its naked cartridges exposed to dust and dirt and the enemy's fire. The feeder is very liable to be damaged by a shot, in which case the gun would probably be rendered useless. 2. The weight of the Gardner gun and of the Gatling is far too great. Machine-guns should be able to move so as to accompany the infantry line, not delay it. They should be capable of being moved and worked by their detachments without extra aid or assistance. It would never do to have mules or horses to drag them, as these often get restive under fire, and at such times cause a gap in the infantry line, whereby the men lose their touch. A gun half the weight of the Gardner gun and mounted on two wheels would be a great boon. The present method of mounting machine-guns, like field-guns, on trail and limber, I look upon as a mistake. The constant reversing and unlimbering loses time. The ammunition is always away from the gun, and the feeding is thus delayed and intermitted. The wheels should be very broad; those at present in use cut into the sand like a knife. I think a Nordenfelt, owing to its lightness, simplicity, and rapidity of fire, would be an improvement upon the Gardner, and especially adapted to the special sort of fighting in which I took part in the Soudan. It should be mounted on two wheels and carry its own ammunition. As a weapon of offence, the machine-gun is most useful. At the battle of El Teb the range was about 1,000 yards. Not a single rebel gunner dared show his head to load the Krupp 6-in. guns while the machine-gun fire was on them. At that distance rifle fire would not, in my opinion, have accomplished this; and as these Krupp guns were fast getting the range of the square when our 'lead-pumpers' opened fire, it was lucky for us they answered as well as they did, for the effect of a few shell into a body of men in square formation might have been most serious. The effect of the machine-gun fire was to prevent the Krupp guns being fired, while the 7-pounders shelled the gunners out of the fort. Machine-guns are specially adapted, if properly mounted, for firing at long ranges, their fire being so perfectly under control. The effect of each shot can generally be seen, and the distance and direction altered accordingly. As a weapon of defence, machine-guns are best placed, when in the field, at the corners of a square, always the weak spot, and one to which too much attention cannot be paid. Carefully worked by steady, well-trained men, machine-guns are invaluable to repulse a heavy charge of cavalry, savages, or other men in close formation. In conclusion, a machine-gun should have:—1. A practical range of 2,000 yards. 2. It should be light enough to be dragged by its squad through and over whatever ground the infantry passes over. 3. Light machine-guns to be worked on tripods might be carried at times with advantage where wheels cannot travel. 4. Machine-guns must be so mounted as to be able to keep up with the infantry, and advance with the infantry line without having to limber up, or unlimber to come into action. 5. The mechanism should be of the simplest kind, with as few parts as possible. The spare gear should be so arranged that any damage to the gun could easily be made good by the men serving it. 6. The feed should be kept as low down as possible to avoid the chance of its being hit, and the cartridges must be enclosed, and not left open and exposed as in the Gardner gun, which, but for the faults enumerated, I consider a very good weapon, but the Gatling next door to useless. Its repeated jambs lost us many valuable lives, while the weight of both guns sorely tried the strength of the Blue-jackets told off as their crews. The great fault of our infantry is, in my opinion, the wild way in which the men use their rifles. It appears to be quite impossible to get the idea into the men's heads that their promiscuous fire is worse than useless. I observed that it greatly encouraged the enemy, who seemed to despise our musketry fire, and this discouraged the young soldier or sailor, who appeared to lose confidence in their rifles, and began to fire all the more wildly the nearer the enemy got to them. I would abolish independent fire in action. No rifle should be fired at a greater distance than 300 yards, and then only in volleys, by word of command. Let machine-guns do the work beyond that range, up to 2,000 yards. I feel convinced that, by this means, ammunition would never run short, and that the moral of the troops would be improved. The above are very general ideas on the subject of machine-guns, or rather, I should say, the notes I made on the subject after seeing them worked so ably and zealously by the Naval Brigade in the Soudan, whose gallant leader, Commander Rolfe, handled his brigade with such skill as to earn the admiration of all who were near him. I may add that my views are held by every officer out here who was with the expedition. Machine-guns have proved themselves to be most useful in the field; but surely the authorities ought to give us the best gun and the best mountings they can possibly procure, and not the worst. To keep up a well-directed fire with a gun worked like a barrel-organ or coffee-mill is impossible for one man to do. It takes one man to aim and one to fire such guns. The horizontal-firing lever action is far the most practical, and enables one man to sight and fire the gun while the second man feeds. Nevertheless, with all their faults, the Gatling and Gardner guns did good service in the Soudan, and both the Admiralty and the War Office should at once turn their attention to the question of selecting the best rifle-calibre gun extant, and to mounting it in a proper manner. The 'Machine-Gun Tactics,' published two years ago by the Army and Navy Gazette, require but slight alteration, as they answer all purposes."

THE RESCUE OF GORDON BY RAIL.

M. Decauville, of Petit Bourg, read a paper at the recent meeting of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers on "Portable Railways," from which, à propos of the Khartoum Expedition, we extract the following remarks :—

"One of the most important uses to which a narrow-gauge line can be put is that of a military railway. The Dutch, Russian, and French Governments have tried it for the transport of provisions, of war material, and of the wounded, in their recent campaigns, In Sumatra, in Turkestan, and in Tunis, these military railroads have excited much interest, and have so fully established their value that a short description will here suffice. The campaign of the Russians against the Turcomans presented two great difficulties—in the crossing of districts where water was extremely scarce or failed entirely, and in the victualling of the expeditionary forces. The latter object was completely effected by means of 67 miles of railway, of 20 in. gauge and 14 lb. steel rails, with 500 carriages for food, water, and passengers. The rails being laid simply on the sand, small locomotives could not be used, and had to be replaced by Kirghiz horses, which drew with ease from 1,800 to 2,200 lbs. weight for 25 miles per day. In the Tunisian war this railroad of 20 in. gauge with 14 lb. rails was replaced by that of 2 ft. gauge, with 14 lb. and 19 lb. rails. There were quite as great difficulties as in the Turcoman campaign, and the country to be crossed was entirely unknown. The observations made before the war spoke of a flat and sandy country. In reality a more uneven country could not be imagined; alternating slopes of about 1 in 10 continually succeeded each other, and before reaching Kairouan 7½ miles of swamp had to be crossed. Nevertheless the horses harnessed to the railway carriages did on an average twelve to seventeen times the work of those working ordinary carriages. In this campaign also, on account of the steep ascents, the use of locomotives had to be given up. The track served for the conveyance not only of victuals, war material, and cannon, but also of the wounded; and a large number of the survivors owe their lives to this railway, which supplied the means of their speedy removal, and without great sufferings, from the temporary hospitals, and of carrying them to places where more care could be bestowed upon them. The carriages which did duty in this campaign are waggons with a platform entirely of metal, resting upon eight wheels. The platform is 13 ft. 1 in. long, and 3 ft. 11 in. wide. The total length over buffers is 14 ft. 9 in. This carriage may be turned at will into a goods waggon; or into a passenger carriage for 16 persons, with seats back to back; or into an ambulance waggon for eight wounded persons. For the transport of cannon the French military engineers have adopted small trucks. A complete equipage, capable of carrying guns weighing from 3 to 9 tons, is composed of trucks with two or three axles, each being fitted with a pivot support, by means of which it is rendered possible to turn the trucks, carrying the heaviest pieces of ordnance, on turntables, and to push them forwards without their going off the rails at the curves. The trucks which have been adopted for the service of the new forts in Paris are drawn by six men, three at each end of the gun; and these are capable of moving with the greatest ease guns weighing 9 tons. The narrow-gauge railway was tested during the war in Tunis more thoroughly than in any preceding campaign; and the military authorities decided, after peace had been restored in that country, to maintain the narrow-gauge railways permanently; this is a satisfactory proof of their having rendered good service. The line from Sousse to Kairouan—is still open for regular traffic. In January, 1883, an express was established, which leaves Sousse every morning and arrives at Kairouan—a distance of 40 miles—in five hours, by means of regularly organised relays. The number of carriages and trucks for the transport of passengers and goods is 118."

"THE SOUDAN CAMPAIGN."

Under this erroneous heading the papers this week give from the London Gazette of Tuesday no less than five columns of closely-printed matter, being copies of the last despatches of Sir G. Graham in reference to the operations of the troops under his command against the Arab tribesmen assembled under Osman Digna in the vicinity of Suakim. We regret that we cannot reproduce this enormous mass of matter, which, so great is the passion of the public for reading, and of the generals for giving details now-a-days, is larger than the despatches relative to Alma, Balaclava, and Inkerman together, but we shall do our best to summarise the most important "mentions" in the document. It was sent to the Under-Secretary of State by Gen. Stephenson by the hand of Captain Baynes on April 14, and is dated Suakim, March 31. Sir G. Graham announces that his object in writing the dispatch was to bring to notice the names of officers, non-commissioned officers, and men who distinguished themselves in the recent operations:—

Staff.—All good officers, carefully selected; all worked loyally and well. Capt. Baynes, Lieut. Romilly, Lieut. Scott; Lieut. Lindsay, Euryalus. The zeal displayed by Capt. Baynes, and the ever-ready intelligent activity shown by Lieut. Lindsay, mentioned specially. Lieut.-Col. Clery's services,—"Conspicuous by a red coat, in a force where officers and men usually wore kharki, he could always be recognised, and when at any critical period I saw his red coat, I knew that there matters would be going well, or if wrong, would soon be rectified, and turned my attention to another part of the field. Lieut.-Col. Gordon's well-known devotion to duty, services disembarking and embarking troops very valuable. Capt. Wauchope, severely wounded at El Teb,—even after receiving his wound did good service; Capt. Williams-Freeman, Provost-Marshal to satisfaction; Lieut. Beaumont, in charge of signallers. Valuable services: Lieut.-Col. Ardagh, Intelligence Department, previously eulogised; under him, Major Wood, Capt. Green, Capt. Slade; Lieut.-Col. Colvile, Grenadier Guards,—all rendered most valuable service, great zeal, energy, and capacity. Coolness and gallantry of Col. Burnaby, attached to the Intelligence Department, who, although severely wounded, continued to do duty. Serjt.-Major Burke, Military Police, great steadiness and coolness under fire, carried the head-quarters' flags. Serjt. Sherwood, Signalling Department, zeal and efficiency, mentioned.

Cavalry Brigade.—Brigdr.-Gen. Stewart, good leader of cavalry, cool, daring, or cautious as required, skilful in reconnaissance and out-post; he speaks highly of Lieut.-Col. Taylor and Lieut. Rhodes.

10th Hussars.—Col. Wood, an excellent cavalry officer, equipped his splendid regiment from local sources with energy and ability. Brigdr.-Gen. Stewart reports Col. Wood as having rendered invaluable assistance. Lieut.-Col. Liddell and Major Gough have also done good service. No report yet from Col. Wood of the non-commissioned officers and men of the 10th Hussars who distinguished themselves.

19th Hussars.—Lieut.-Col. Webster gave every assistance in his power to secure the success of the Brigade. Lieut.-Col. Barrow, a most valuable officer, beyond praise. Capt. Jenkins, personally engaged with three of the enemy at one time. By his gallantry and conduct, set a good example to all. Regtl. Serjt.-Major Lima and Qrmr.-Serjt. Marshall set a good example of coolness and courage. Serjt. Phipps, twice badly wounded, refused to leave the field till he fainted from loss of blood. Troop Serjt.-Major Taylor, Serjt. Fenton, and Private Bosely, favourably mentioned.

Mounted Infantry.—Most efficiently handled by Capt. Humphreys, the Welsh Regt. Stewart cannot speak of him too highly. Ably assisted by Lieut. C. H. Payne. Ptes. George Hunter, 3rd King's Royal Rifles, and Joseph Clift, Sussex Regt., mentioned for gallantry and devotion at Tamai.

Royal Artillery.—Major Lloyd's professional knowledge, energy, and judgment, most valuable. The mule battery, commanded by Major E. H. Holley, was of great service, Major Holley, an excellent artillery officer. Capt. Wodehouse, conspicuous by energy and ability. Surg. Lucas and Vet.-Surg. Beech, favourably mentioned. Gunner W. Hanson, at Tamai, knocked down one of the enemy with his rammer, thereby saving the life of a comrade. The 7-pounder Naval guns, worked by the 6th Battery, 1st Brigade, sustained desperate charges. On one occasion blacks succeeded penetrating among the gun detachments. One was knocked down by Gunner Isaac Phipps with a rammer, another by Gunner James Aden with a round of case which he was carrying, a third was shot by Bombdr. Treadwell with a revolver.

Royal Engineers.—Officers and men worked to entire satisfaction. Major Todd made excellent arrangements, Capt. Dorward showed great practical ability, the other officers all had hard work and did good service. 2nd Corpls. Bruce and Martin, Lance-Corpl. Jones, Sappers Brown and Tirwan mentioned.

1st Infantry Brigade.—Sir R. Buller, by his coolness in action, his knowledge of soldiers, and experience in the field, combined with his great personal ascendancy over officers and men, most valuable. Brigdr.-Gen. Buller reports specially Capt. Kelly and Lieut. St. Aubyn; the former was severely contused by a spent case-shot, but remained at his duties.

King's Royal Rifles.—Col. Sir Cromer Ashburnham, well-tried capacity for leading troops. Lieut.-Col. Ogilvy and Major Fraser, favourable notice. Serjt. William Nix, deserving conduct in action.

1st Gordon Highlanders.—Lieut.-Col. Hammill showed great steadiness. Major Cross and Capt. Menzies specially distinguished. Pte. D. McPherson received a spear wound, and after being taken to hospital was, at his own request, allowed to march with battalion next morning.

2nd Royal Irish Fusiliers.—Conspicuous for steadiness in formation during action, and for good discipline on the march. Capt. Gordon recommended for zeal and ability; Capt. Rogers favourably mentioned; Surg. Pedlow showed great devotion to duty.

2nd Infantry Brigade.—Major-Gen. Davis did his utmost to preserve steadiness and good discipline, brings to notice Capt. Hitchcock and Lieut. Douglass.

1st Royal Highlanders.—Lieut.-Col. Green noticed, exerting himself to keep order and discipline:—"In my despatch of March 2, says Gen. Graham, I referred to the 1st Royal Highlanders as having been somewhat out of hand at El Teb, by their over-eagerness to fire on the enemy. I have now, however, the satisfaction of reporting that since that action this fine battalion has shown an excellent spirit and a determination to prove itself worthy of the high reputation earned by a century and a half of splendid service in all parts of the world. At Tamai the Black Watch charged most gallantly, only fell back when forced to do so, losing more men in close fighting than any other battalion, and rallying to a man when the opportunity arrived." Major Eden, Capt. Brophy, and Lieut. Norman MacLeod specially brought to notice for coolness and gallantry in action. Surg. Treherne specially mentioned for attention to the wounded in action. Specially noticed:—Serjt. J. Sutherland, Pte. Henry Shires, Drummer Henry Mumford, Hospital Serjt. W. Davidson, and Pte. Thomas Edwards.

1st York and Lancaster.—Fine battalion, seasoned soldiers; prominent share in the fighting line, great satisfaction by their steadiness. Capt. Littledale had a hand-to-hand encounter with several of the enemy. He was knocked down, a severe spear wound; rescued by his men, and although bleeding profusely, continued to lead his company. Major Dalgety, injured by a shell at El Teb, continued to lead his men, and at Tamai displayed the utmost gallantry. Qrmr. Mahony a very efficient officer. Colour-Serjt. Wake (badly wounded), Colour-Serjt. Hayward, Serjt. Doyle, Serjt. Webb, Lance-Serjts. Haycock and James, Corpls. Baxter and Dossett; Ptes. Edwards and Callanan (both killed); Serjt. Howell and Pte. P. Foy coolness and gallantry. Major Aitken, previously mentioned for his gallantry at El Teb, fell fighting bravely at Tamai. With him fell Serjt. Ronald Fraser and Lance-Corpl. Percy Finlay, who nobly went back to assist their officer. Colour-Serjt. Michael Johnston and Serjt. William Campbell, and many others, all of the Royal Highlanders, were seen bravely fighting to the last. One officer and 15 men of the 1st York and Lancaster were killed at the right front corner of the square, where the storm first burst upon them. These men, as Lieut.-Col. Byam (who was himself in the thick of it) reports, "Stood their ground, and would not be forced back." Their bodies were afterwards picked up on the margin of the ravine where they fell. Their names are:—Capt. H. G. W. Ford, Corpl. W. Maynard, Lance-Corpl. R. Mayors, Ptes. W. Webb, J. Richards, J. Roy, S. Le Blancq, G. Higginson, W. West, J. Brophy, R. Cripps, I. Hope, P. Molloy, J. Pilbeam, C. Read, and C. Rookyard.

Royal Marines.—Colonel Tuson, steadiness and gallantry, contributed largely to the success. Brevet Major Tucker, great readiness and intelligence. Staff Surgeon Martin favourably mentioned. Major Colwell, Surg. Cross, Serjt.-Major J. Hurst, Temeraire, Pte. J. Birstwhistle, Temeraire, Pte. Yerbury, Temeraire, Gunner Rolf, Pte. F. Patterson, Pte. J. Davis, Gunner A. Bretwell, Pte. D. Brady, specially brought to notice.

Army Medical Department most ably administered by Deputy-Surg.-Gen. McDowell; wounded carefully provided for, and promptly attended to. After El Teb, 4.25 p.m., signalled for tents, medical comforts, &c. The convoy, under Surg. Prendergast, arrived at 6 p.m., serious cases at once placed under cover. Surg.-Major Connolly proceeded over the ground where the Cavalry had charged, to make sure that no wounded were left. The Surgeon-General remarks in his report:—"Though many of the wounded had injuries of the severest form, still we had no deaths from hæmorrhage, a fact which exhibits, in the strongest light, the skill and attention of the Medical officers working under the most trying circumstances":—Surg.-Major Wilson, Surg.-Major Connolly, Surg. Prendergast, who was badly wounded while attending a wounded man; Surg.-Major Catherwood, Surg.-Major Greene, Surg.-Major Venour, especially. Qrmr. Enright, Staff Serjts. Clarke and Genese, and Serjt. A. G. Chalk, favourably mentioned.

Commissariat and Transport Corps.—Assist.-Comy.-Gen. Nugent, indefatigable zeal and intelligence. Great service rendered by Mr. Crook, chief engineer, Euryalus, and those under him. Nothing could exceed the ability and devotion with which Assist.-Comy.-Gen. Nugent threw himself into his work, he was ably supported by those under him, who literally worked night and day. Deputy-Assist.-Comy.-Gens. Rainsford and Hamilton, most valuable officers, specially mentioned. Major Forster, Lieuts. Turner and Bower, and Conductor Hickie mentioned for zeal and energy.

Ordnance Store Department.—Under A.C.G.O. Mills, worked most satisfactorily. Special notice: Deputy-Assist.-Comy.-Gen. of Ordnance Houghton for zeal and intelligence.

Army Chaplains.—The Revs. G. Smith, Church of England, J. M'Taggart, Presbyterian, and R. Brindle, Roman Catholic, were assiduous in their attention to the wounded. The Rev. J. Webster, Wesleyan, accompanied the expedition.

Army Veterinary Department.—Duties satisfactorily carried on by Vet.-Surg. Clayton and those under him.

Army Pay Department.—Well administered by Major Farwell. Thanks to Mr. Wyld.

Naval Brigade.—Splendid services. At El Teb fought under the eyes of their Admiral. Capt. Wilson, Hecla, not content with the position of a spectator, took active share in the defence of the sailors' guns in a hand-to-hand combat, recommended for V.C. Surg. Gimlette, and 12 men, who had been previously dragging their guns over heavy ground and then through the three hours' fight, told off to carry Lieut. Royds back, arrived with their wounded officer about 11 o'clock that night at Trinkitat. They started off again about 4 o'clock the next morning, arriving at El Teb to take their share in the severe toils of that day. "I beg to be allowed to express my high admiration, and that of the force I have had the honour to command, at the thoroughly cordial co-operation of the Royal Navy throughout the expedition. Nothing could exceed the courtesy and readiness of Admiral Sir W. Hewett to meet all our requirements, and the work of loading and unloading the ships under Capt. Andoe, R.N., proceeded smoothly and swiftly, the officers and men of both services working cordially together." "The shifting of the base from Trinkitat to Suakim entailed severe fatigues and labours, as, owing to the dangerous character of the coast, ships could only move by day, and the time at my disposal being short, it was necessary to hurry on the operation of embarking and disembarking men, horses, camels, stores, &c., so that the work had to be carried on day and night. Officers and men understood this, and worked cheerfully. They also bore the toils and privations of long marches in the desert under a burning sun with a necessarily short supply of water. On the night preceding the action at Tamai there was little sleep, as the enemy were firing on us continuously from past midnight to dawn. This, too, was borne silently and without flinching. As regards strength and endurance I beg to point to the remarkably low sick rate (less than 2 per cent.), and to the fact that not one man was lost by sickness. The distances marched under a burning sun were also creditable. On the return from Tokar to Trinkitat the distance marched was about 16 miles, and the two return marches to Suakim from the front were about the same distance. On all these occasions the troops marched in easily, with scarcely a man falling out, though there many cases of blistered feet from the burning sand. It is true that many men were prostrated by the intense heat during the march out on the first day of the last advance, yet the same men, with few exceptions, advanced cheerfully the next day towards Tamanieb. Late that afternoon I had to call up the Royal Highlanders and Royal Rifles in expectation of resistance, and the men marched cheerily to the sound of song and pipe, not a man falling out when the next move was to bring them in presence of the enemy. This could not have been accomplished without a thoroughly sound system of interior economy in the regiments, battalions, and corps composing the force; and the greatest credit is due to the regimental officers, who kept their men in such a high state of efficiency. Considering the way in which the hardships were borne, and the obstacles overcome, also that the foe was far from being a despicable one, it is in no spirit of boasting I venture to submit that, although containing many young soldiers in the ranks, and although hurriedly got together, partly composed of troops on passage home from India, who had to be equipped from local sources, the force sent on this expedition has shown itself worthy of the British Army."

CIVILIAN EXPENDITURE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Subsequently to my letter in your journal on March 29, I read with much interest a pamphlet by Capt. C. W. White, entitled "Our Military Position—A Note of Warning," which has attracted much attention in military circles, as the views therein expressed accord very generally with the opinions of regimental officers as to the cause of the evil which afflicts the service. The Army, as well as the nation, ought to be indebted to this officer for thus boldly and plainly setting before the public some information relating to our military administration, which his position and experience specially qualify him to impart. The War Office civilian element has been dominant for many years, and what has been the result? While they have given us an army of clerks—everything being needlessly complicated to augment the clerical element—the armed force on which the nation would have to depend for its very existence in the event of a European war is composed of striplings. Esprit de corps, and all those time-honoured traditions which gave regiments that cohesion so essential to their efficiency and well-being have been ruthlessly destroyed. We have not at the present time an army in any sense adequate to our requirements, to the position England occupies in the world, or equal to what it ought to be for the money annually voted. The boasted localisation scheme, as carried out, is virtually a system without a backbone. If we are to induce a better class of men to join the service, it stands to reason that we must either raise the pay, or provide, as of old, some provision in the shape of pension to fall back upon when they take their discharge, as we cannot expect men to give their services below the price of the labour market, with the certain prospect of being cast adrift penniless when discharged; and if the country is not prepared to pay the market price for the voluntary material, then it must resort to compulsory service to provide a force adequate for the nation's security. Out of about 14 millions annually voted for effective Army services, only some four and a half millions are required for the whole of our Home and Colonial land forces, including pay of the general Staff, regimental pay and allowances, and other charges. It would be well if the cost of the other items which absorb the remaining nine and a half millions were closely scrutinised, with a view to increasing the proportion required for the maintenance of the fighting portion of the Army. As an example of how the cost of the Head-quarter administration of the Army has apparently needlessly increased, take the War Office. In the Army Estimates for 1852-3, the total is £95,956 16s. 10d., viz.,—Total for Military Department, £35,074 4s. 5d.; Civil Department, £60,882 12s. 5d. In the Army Estimates for 1878-9, the total is £251,490, viz.,—Salaries of Central Department, £35,777; Department of Officer Commanding-in-Chief (inclusive of regimental pay and allowances, excluded in 1852-3), £64,487; Surveyor-General, £59,661; Financial Secretary, £69,343; pay of writers, £7,500; office-keepers and messengers, £12,220; contingencies, £2,500. As the Department of Surveyor-General of Ordnance was amalgamated with the War Office in 1855, which accounts for some of the increase, I have selected the estimates for 1878-9, as showing the items for the different departments of the War Office separately. I will now contrast in detail the salaries of the Secretary of State and clerical staff of the War Office for 1852-3 with similar items in the central and financial department of the War Office for 1878-9:—1852-3.—1 Secretary of State, £2,480; 1 deputy ditto, £1,500; 1 chief examiner, £1,200; 1 first clerk, £1,000; 8 first clerks, £5,642 8s.; 22 second ditto, £9,166 4s. 10d.; 41 third ditto, £6,318 8s. 4d.; 7 temporary, £1,000; book-keeper, £435. 1878-9.—Central Department:—1 Secretary of State, £5,000; 1 Parliamentary ditto, £1,500; 1 permanent under ditto, £2,000; 1 assistant under ditto, £1,500; private secretary and assistant private secretaries to above, £750; 1 legal secretary, £1,500; 1 chief clerk and registrar, £1,200; 1 principal, £1,000; 2 assistants, £1,300; 8 senior clerks, £4,592; 17 juniors, £6,483; 17 supernumerary (1st class), £4,225; 11 ditto (2nd class), £1,321; 4 men clerks, £320; sundry others, £3,421. Financial Secretary's Department:—1 Financial Secretary, £1,500; 1 Accountant-General, £1,500; 1 deputy ditto, £1,000; 1 assistant ditto, £900; 1 principal book-keeper, £900; 3 principals, £2,400; 1 estimate clerk, £800; 10 assistants, £6,500; 25 senior clerks, £15,227; 55 first clerks, £21,065; 14 supplementary (1st class), £3,500; 8 ditto ditto (2nd class), £960; sundry others, £13,091. In the Estimates for 1884-5, the following details will give some idea that the clerical cost is still increasing:—Civil clerks: 21 principals, £17,689; 46 seniors, £28,874; 56 clerks, £24,642; 9 ditto, upper division, £1,442; 63 supply clerks, £15,572; 188 men clerks, lower division, £21,973. It must also be borne in mind that all the subordinate officials are granted very liberal retiring allowances. Some years back, when a number were retired to give promotion to juniors, they received extravagantly large bonuses in addition. The cost of our clothing supply for 1884-5, including a sum of £24,250 pay and allowance of the staff of the Clothing Establishment, is estimated at £941,250,—an extravagant sum, considering our Army strength. The cost of administration, of the pay of men in all its details, caused by a needless system of complication, is extremely excessive. It will be seen, by the contrasted details given between 1852-3 and 1878-9, that in the former estimate the Commander-in-Chief and his staff were given precedence; in the latter estimate, the civil element takes the first position, on the right of the costly tone.

Woolwich, E. R. WETHERED, Lieut.-Col.

THE ARTILLERY REGIMENT.

A correspondent, whose views are entitled to respect, sends us the following remarks:—

"The present organisation of the Royal Regiment of Artillery is so very peculiar, that it is evident to many of the officers of the regiment that a change will have to be made before long. While there is much to be said in favour of dividing the regiment, and separating the Garrison Artillery from the Horse and Field, the proposition is viewed by many with a feeling of horror; the integrity of the corps being, in their opinion, a matter of paramount importance. Simplicity the present organisation cannot pretend to have. Why the Field Artillery should be divided into four brigades of nearly 20 batteries each, and the Garrison Artillery into 11 divisions of eight or nine batteries each, is difficult to understand, and makes the organisation of the two branches to be different. In the following scheme simplicity is aimed at, and the whole corps divided into divisions and subdivided into brigades of equal number of batteries. Suppose the whole regiment or corps to consist of 11 divisions, viz.:—The Northern, the Lancashire, the Eastern, the Cinque Ports, the London, the Southern, the Western, the Scottish, the Welsh, the North Irish, and the South Irish. "Ab uno disce omnes," and the 4th, or Cinque Ports division, shall be analysed as a specimen of an eleventh part of the whole of the Artillery. The division consists of its divisional staff and three brigades. The 2nd brigade is Kent Artillery Militia, and the 3rd is Royal Sussex Artillery Militia. The staff of the division consists of a colonel, brigade-major, ridingmaster, and quartermaster at head-quarters; with three colonels, one ridingmaster, and two quartermasters in addition, who may be employed on foreign service, or elsewhere. The 1st, or service brigade, has for its staff as many lieutenant-colonels and adjutants as may be required, one lieutenant-colonel and one adjutant being horse artillery, the remainder field and garrison. The service batteries, 18 in number, are lettered from A to R. The first two are horse artillery (or the first three, should horse artillery come into fashion again); the next seven, field; and the remaining nine, garrison, heavy, and mountain batteries. Lastly, there is a depôt stationed at the recruiting head-quarters of the division, which furnishes the service batteries with recruits. On the regimental list, the 1st brigade's service batteries would appear something as follows. The places and dates are hypothetical:—

Batteries.	Equipment.	Majors.	Capts.	Lieuts.	Stations.	Dates.
A	13-pr. R.H.A.	1	1	3	Canterbury	5-'83
B	13-pr. R.H.A.	1	1	3	Umballa	12-'82
C	16-pr. R.A.	1	1	3	Woolwich	4-'83
D	13-pr. R.A.	1	1	3	Shorncliffe	5-'82
E	9-pr. R.A.	1	1	3	Jullundur	11-'82
F	16-pr. R.A.	1	1	3	Shorncliffe	5-'83
G	9-pr. R.A.	1	1	3	Secunderabad	2-'84
H	13-pr. R.A.	1	1	3	Ahmedabad	10-'83
I	9-pr. R.A.	1	1	3	Secunderabad	12-'82
J	Garrison R.A.	1	1	2	Dover	3-'81
K	Garrison R.A.	1	1	2	Guernsey	4-'83
L	Garrison R.A.	1	1	2	Alderney	3-'82
M	Garrison R.A.	1	1	2	Dover	4-'82
N	Garrison R.A.	1	1	2	Jamaica	11-'82
O	Mountain R.A.	1	1	3	Khandalla	11-'83
P	Heavy R.A.	1	1	3	St. Thos. Mt.	1-'82
Q	Garrison R.A.	1	1	2	Barbadoes	11-'83
R	Garrison R.A.	1	1	2	Quetta	11-'83
Depôt		1	1	2	Dover	4-'77

The brigade staff for this would be a lieutenant-colonel and adjutant, R.H.A., suppose at Umballa. A lieutenant-colonel and adjutant, R.A., at Shorncliffe, Dover, Secunderabad, Barbadoes, and the Channel Islands. Five more lieutenant-colonels attached, or elsewhere employed, makes the staff of the brigade 11 lieutenant-colonels and six adjutants. The state of a division, therefore, is:—Colonels, 4; captain (brigade-major), 1; ridingmasters, 2; quartermasters, 3; 10. On the division staff—Lieutenant-colonels, 11; lieutenants and adjutants, 6; 17. On the 1st or service brigade staff—Majors, 19; captains, 19; lieutenants, 49. In the service batteries of the 1st brigade and its depôt—Colonels, 4; lieutenant-colonels, 11; majors, 19; captains, 20; lieutenants, 55; ridingmasters, 2; quartermasters, 3; total, 114. The number of Militia brigades varies in the different divisions. In the North Irish, or 10th division, there are eight. In the London, or 5th division, there appear to be none. The staff of a Militia brigade consists of a lieutenant-colonel, an instructor of artillery, an adjutant, quartermaster, and a medical officer; in all, five officers. The number of batteries, six. The state of the service brigades in the eleven divisions comprising the whole Artillery corps is easily obtained by multiplying the state of one division by 11: Colonels, 44; lieutenant-colonels, 121; majors, 209; captains, 220; lieutenants, 605; ridingmasters, 22; quartermasters, 33; total, 1,254. For that number of officers, there are 22 batteries of horse artillery, 77 of field, and 99 of garrison, with 11 depôts. The Regimental Staff at the War Office, the riding and removal establishments, the coast brigade, the miscellaneous and sundry appointments, the manufacturing departments, the school of gunnery, the Hyderabad contingent, the ordnance departments, the Punjab frontier forces, and the Bombay native artillery, complete the Regimental List. For the sake of similarity, it has been assumed that the 1st brigade of a division consists of two horse, seven field, and nine garrison, with siege and mountain batteries. To have named the first three as horse would have given 33 horse batteries, which is in excess of the present establishment. The divisions could, without confusing the organisation, be so constituted that the sum of the service brigades shall contain the precise number of horse, field, garrison, heavy, and mountain batteries that it may seem convenient to the State to maintain.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE.

The Civil Service Commissioners have issued the usual rules and regulations for the preliminary examinations for admission to the Royal Military College to be held in London, Edinburgh, and Dublin on July 9 and 10, and on August 27 and 28, 1884, under the regulations issued with G. O. 11 of 1884. 1. No preliminary examinations for admission to Sandhurst will take place immediately preceding the "Further Examination" of December, 1884. 2. Gentlemen who propose to be candidates will be permitted to present themselves for the Preliminary Examination on either, but not on both, of these occasions. This Preliminary Examination will not be reckoned in the number of trials allowed by the Regulations. 3. Gentlemen who wish to attend the Examination in July or August, must apply, in their own handwriting, direct to the Secretary of the Civil Service Commissioners. The form must be returned not later than June 26, for the July examination, and August 14 for the August examination. 4. No evidence of age or moral character is required for admission to either of these Preliminary Examinations. 5. It must be understood that candidates will not be admitted to the "Further" examination in December unless they send to the Military Secretary, on or before October 15, the papers required by paragraph 16 of the Regulations. 6. No candidate will be allowed to attend the "Further" unless he has passed the "Preliminary" examination, or can produce a certificate as laid down in the following paragraph. 7. Candidates may be exempted from the Preliminary Examination in all subjects except geometrical drawing, if they can produce any of the following:—(1.) A certificate of having passed any of the University examinations mentioned in paragraph 2 (b) of the Regulations; (2.) a certificate of having passed Responsions at Oxford, or the Oxford University examination in lieu thereof. (3.) A certificate of having passed the Matriculation Examination of the London University; (4), a certificate of having passed the first university examination in arts or in engineering at the Royal University of Ireland; (5), the higher certificate of the Oxford and Cambridge Schools Examination Board, provided it embraces mathematics,—if it does not include that subject, they will be required also to undergo an examination therein; (6), a certificate of having passed the examination for a degree or the preliminary examination of the Victoria University, Manchester. Candidates so exempted may defer their examination in geometrical drawing until the time of the "Further" examination. Candidates claiming exemption under this paragraph must send along with their form of application to the Civil Service Commissioners the certificates on which they found their claim. 8. Officers of Militia who propose to be candidates for commissions in the Army may be admitted to these Preliminary Examinations on the same conditions as candidates for admission to the Royal Military College. Those who pass will be exempted from the preliminary part of the special examination of Militia candidates. Candidates for admission to the Royal Military Academy may also be admitted on the same conditions for examination in dictation, geography, and modern language. Those who pass will, when they attend the preliminary examination for the Royal Military Academy be exempted from examination in those subjects. 9. This "Preliminary" examination is separate from the "Further" examination, and no marks can be given in the one for work done in the other. 10. A fee of £1 will be required from every candidate admitted to an examination. In consequence of a communication from the War Office, it is the intention of the Commissioners to raise gradually the standard of qualification in modern languages.

ACTIVE SERVICE cannot wear out the teeth that are brushed night and morning with ROWLAND'S ODONTO, the purest and most fragrant dentifrice ever made. All dentists allow that neither washes nor pastes are as efficacious for polishing the teeth and keeping them sound and white as a pure and non-gritty tooth-powder; such ROWLAND'S ODONTO has always proved itself. Ask any dealer in perfumery for ROWLAND'S ODONTO, and avoid spurious imitations, theirs being the only original and genuine Odonto.

Natural History of the Mammalia of India. By Robert Sterndale. (Calcutta: Thacker and Co.)

The compiler of this exceedingly valuable treatise on the mammals of India tells us in the preface that it was designed to meet the existing want of a popular manual; and having looked carefully through the book, we are bound to state our opinion that it is in all respects the most serviceable handbook we have any knowledge of, and that it is especially one adapted for the sportsman or naturalist in a country where large collections of books are difficult to carry. The author, drawing upon his own experience and that of his personal friends for information respecting the habits of animals, has not discarded scientific classification and details; and the more important divisions of the mammalia, which include fish, as we would call them, whales, dolphins, &c., are illustrated by woodcuts of the typical animals, generally well drawn, characteristic, and trustworthy. Messrs. Thacker and Co. are to be congratulated on having secured the services of Mr. Sterndale in producing a work which is a handy guide amongst the mammals, for the officer or traveller in India, whether he means to kill, stuff, eat, or study them.

London. By Herbert Fry. (W. H. Allen and Co.)

This handbook is not only of great practical value, but abounds with anecdotes and curious incidents, and is illustrated by eighteen birds'-eye views of the principal streets in London, and by a map showing suburbs and environs. Mr. Fry, the editor, is known as the editor of "The Royal Guide to the London Charities," a "Handbook to Normandy," "The Road to Paris," and other works. Before commencing his peregrinations through London, in which, no doubt, a goodly array of readers will accompany him, Mr. Fry thinks it well to give a hint as to the rule of the road for pedestrians. It is the same as on the Continent, "Keep always to the right hand," but drivers of carriages must always "Keep to the left":—

> "The rule of the road is a paradox quite,
>   For as you are driving along, Sir,
> If you keep to the left, you will surely go right;
>   If you keep to the right, you'll go wrong, Sir."

In order to give the reader some idea of the contents of this guide-book, we extract a few particulars relating to the City Companies. Originally they were merely trade associations; but as they obtained charters of privilege from the Crown, they became powerful societies, able to regulate and restrict trade, and to punish by fines or imprisonment those who infringed their privileges,—in a word, they became Trades Unions, with full power to enforce their regulations. The great Companies take precedence as follows: —The Mercers' Company, the Grocers' Company, the Drapers', the Fishmongers', Goldsmiths' Company, Skinners', Merchant Taylors', Haberdashers', Salters', Ironmongers', Vintners', and Clothworkers' Company.

Mr. J. B. Herbert has written an interesting little brochure, entitled The Life and Services of Admiral Sir T. Foley, G.C.B., Rear-Admiral of Great Britain, published by Owen and Co., Cardiff, in which he recounts from various sources the chief incidents in the career of a very gallant officer. Captain Foley's brilliant manœuvre at the battle of the Nile is well known to all sailors; and Mr. Herbert, who appears to have some family reasons for reviving the memories of his hero, quotes "Marshall's Naval Biography," to show that Foley had mentioned to Trowbridge and Hood the evening before the battle his idea of running inshore of the French lines, and so far to prove he had the credit of that brilliant and daring exploit which destroyed the French Navy. The Board of Admiralty may take to heart, even to-day, the exclamation wrung from Nelson in the bitterness of his heart, when he found he could not follow the vessels which had escaped from Aboukir,—"Want of frigates will be found stamped on my heart, if I am to die this moment!" Mr. Herbert, indeed, observes that, if Nelson had possessed the frigates he pined for, he would have pounced upon Napoleon and the French Fleet, ere they arrived in Egypt: "Bonaparte would have been killed or captured; Trafalgar would not have been fought; the Peninsular War would never have taken place; the Duke of Wellington's extraordinary genius would have had no field, and his Grace would probably not have emerged from comparative obscurity; there would have been no Austerlitz; no retreat from Moscow; no Leipsic; no Waterloo; and no National Debt! Certainly, Lord Spencer and the Board of Admiralty had much to answer for." In a little memoir of this sort there is no reason to carp, perhaps, at the description of Abermarlais Park, or the account of Lady Lucy Foley; but it is curious to come across, in these pages, a eulogium of Sir Charles Napier, and the reference to Meanee, where that fiery conqueror, with 500 of the 22nd under Sir John Pennefather, and about twice as many Sepoys, attacked and destroyed 20,000 Beloochees in a strong position of their own choosing. In these few pages there is a good deal to make us think of the good old times of the Navy, and of the really grand old men, speaking of them in connection with the time in which they lived, who fought for and won the supremacy of England by sea.

The Army and Navy Magazine contains another number of the "Battle-fields of Germany," by Colonel Malleson, who gives us an interesting and apparently accurate and careful account of the great battle of Blenheim. No one who reads the paper can fail to recognise the immense magnitude of the service rendered to the great English General by the splendid soldier, Prince Eugène. A paper on "Cramming," or rather "Military Examinations," by "W. M.," is an analytical examination of the present standards, ending with an admission that the crammer is an inevitable figure on the scene of competitive examinations. Lieutenant-Colonel Hilliard contributes an account—not finished—of his visit to the capital of Southern Morocco,. The author visited Morocco when Sir J. D. Hay went there in 1882 on a mission to the Sultan Mulai Hassan.

A Grammar of Colloquial French. By J. E. P. Massé. (Relfe Brothers.)—Mr. Massé is one of the examiners in modern languages to the Oxford and Cambridge Schools Examination Board, the Board of Intermediate Education in Ireland, the Civil Service Commission, and the College of Preceptors, and he has written several books on modern languages, and whatever he says on the subject is for the most part accepted as being reliable. The brochure now published is well suited for pupils who may have already mastered the rudiments, but are only preparing to wage war with the French verbs and the tough idioms which are brought under their notice by the use of exercises and progressively-arranged paradigms.

FOREIGN MILITARY LITERATURE.

In the Armeeblatt the Austrian branch of the Red Cross Association is described. It was founded in 1880, and thirty columns were organised by May, 1883, all fully equipped with ambulance waggons and requisites. Owing to Archduke Carl Ludwig, who subscribed 10,000 florins, as well as to the support of the Association of Veterans, the personnel has been supplied; and there is besides a reserve of 70 per cent. The Hungarian branch has also established ten transport columns fully equipped, so that the Austro-Hungarian branches of the Red Cross could put into the field, including the two columns presented by the German Order of St. John, 42 ambulance fourgons and 630 carriages, for the transport of the wounded, which could transport in one journey 2,520 seriously wounded or 5,040 lightly wounded. The employment of dismounted cavalry is treated in another article by our contemporary. At decisive junctures of future battles, cavalry will have to be employed as formerly, as recent wars, great and little, have fully demonstrated; but masses of cavalry thrown against infantry, court annihilation. Under these circumstances, cavalry, if equipped with the best firearm that can be found for it, will, the Armeeblatt thinks, be able to play two important rôles; but it is of vital consequence that they should be perfectly trained to change from their proper functions to take the place of and act as infantry when dismounted.

"A CHAMELEON'S" REMARKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—According to the statistical returns now before us concerning the composition of the Scottish and Highland regiments, we see that "A Chameleon" is not far out when he says some Scottish regiments have a large proportion of "foreigners" in them, but the Duke of Albany's Seaforth Highlanders got 129 out of 133 lately belonging to the district where the depôt is placed; the Cameron Highlanders appear also to be very national; as to the Black Watch and Gordon regiments, all one can say is they appear as popular among "foreigners" as among Scotchmen at the present moment, or shall we blame a recruiting system whereby "foreigners" are invited beyond a certain proportion to each Highland regiment; for "foreigners" there always have been since the formation of the regiment as the 43rd or 42nd, seeing that Crawford himself was a Lowlander who commanded the 42nd. To advocate the doing away with Highland dress because the recruiting-serjeants are forced to take foreigners would be too ridiculous. There are vast numbers of Highlanders in Glasgow who would go into the ranks if it were made worth their while. Pay the soldiers ill, and you will get Dick, Tom, and 'Arry, not the men of the "mountain and the flood" who look to "getting on" in life. Look at the Sutherland, Perthshire, and Argyll Volunteer Regiments, finer could not be seen, but these men would not enlist in a Line regiment, or the majority would not. Raise the pay, Sir, and you will get the men. —I am, &c., ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL.

BOMBAY ARMY NEWS.

Major Dundas, D.A.A.G., goes to Mhow, and will be succeeded by Major Creagh, 7th Dragoon Guards, whose regiment only arrived in India two or three months ago. He is very fortunate in obtaining such an appointment so soon after his arrival, and without having passed the qualifying examination for Staff employ, as required by G.G.O. 580 of 1873. Dr. Auchinlech leaves for England on three months' leave early next month, and Deputy-Surg.-Gen. Fraser is likely to act for him. Surg.-Major McConaghy goes home on short leave in August. Lieut.-Col. Blowers, 10th Bombay Infantry, has sent in his papers. Col. Dodd, commandant of the same regiment, has applied for furlough. It is thought that Lieut.-Col. Stock will be appointed to officiate for him. Lieut.-Col. Sartorius left Suez for Bombay on Sunday. It is expected that he will rejoin the Marine battalion as second-in-command, Major Echalaz and Capt. Simpson (who has just returned from furlough) reverting to wing-commander and wing-officer respectively.—Times of India.

London Amusements.

The arrangements of the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, have been slightly altered during the week, and the second performance of "La Gioconda" had to be deferred till Thursday. Madame Sembrich's appearance has been postponed till next week, owing to a delay in her arrival from America. In the meantime, Madame Pauline Lucca has made a welcome reappearance in "Il Trovatore," and Madame Albani is announced to make her first appearance this season on Saturday evening as Violetta in "La Traviata."

The last week of the Carl Rosa opera season at Drury Lane has included repetitions of "The Canterbury Pilgrims," "Carmen," "The Bohemian Girl," and "Faust." The final performance is given this evening (Saturday), the opera being "Il Trovatore," with Madame Marie Roze and Mr. Joseph Maas as the chief vocalists.

How the experiment of converting Sheridan's familiar comedy of "The Rivals" into a panoramic drama will prove successful at the Haymarket, time must decide. Though the performance has been decidedly better since the first night, the revival is undoubtedly recommended rather by its pictorial effects than its histrionic force. No better delineation of Mrs. Malaprop's peculiarities could possibly be found than is supplied by Mrs. Stirling, who has so often delighted audiences by her admirable rendering of this character; but in other respects old Haymarket playgoers may have thought of former favourites of the footlights with a sigh of regret at their absence. As Faulkland and Julia, Mr. Bancroft and Mrs. Bernard-Beere were more interesting lovers than might have been anticipated; but Mr. Pinero gives us a choleric Sir Anthony of a very different kind to that presented by his more robust predecessors; and Mr. Forbes Robertson, as Captain Absolute misses some of the best points of his part by an apparent desire to escape the trammels of tradition. Mr. Lionel Brough plays Bob Acres with much farcical humour; and Miss Calhoun, as the imaginative Lydia Languish, is very agreeable, but hardly romantic enough. Mr. Alfred Bishop fails to catch the spirit of Sir Lucius O'Trigger, and the auditors in their turn fail to catch the sentences of David, spoken by Mr. Brookfield with a Dorsetshire dialect probably more correct than it is comprehensible. The first scene, illustrating Bath in the last century, is a remarkable stage picture of the period, presented with notable elaboration of detail, and the gavotte danced by the principal personages in the "new rooms" is likely to prove one of the most attractive features of a revival unquestionably showing the expenditure of much care and money on the part of the management.

Under the title of "Devotion," a version by the younger Mr. Dion Boucicault of Lockroy and Badon's "Un Duel sous Richelieu," has been produced at the Court Theatre. Most of the situations of the original play are preserved; but the four acts have their interest preserved more by the excellence of the acting than the strength of the story. In the last act, Mr. Clayton makes the best possible use of the one great opportunity afforded him. Miss Ada Cavendish plays the heroine with power, Mr. Conway acts with energy the supposed faithless lover, and the vivacity of Miss Lottie Venne in an interpolated character agreeably relieves the serious interest of the play. A previous adaptation in three acts, by Miss Boaden, and entitled "A Duel in Richelieu's Time," was brought out at the Haymarket, July 9, 1832, when Miss Taylor, afterwards Mrs. Walter Lacy, played the part of Marie, originally "created" by Madame Albert.

The spectacular extravaganza of "Lalla Rookh," at the Novelty Theatre, is a brief but brilliantly embellished after-piece, combining all the attractions of pretty faces, lively music, picturesque processions, and elaborate scenery. Miss Kate Vaughan is a very graceful representative of Lalla Rookh, and Miss Minnie Mario as the poet-prince Feramorz. Miss Dot Mario as the vivacious Captain of the Guard, and Mr. Henry Nicholls as the comic Chamberlain of the Eastern Court, liberally supplied with topical songs, help to make the hour of performance pass rapidly and merrily away.

Salvini's last appearance in London is now arranged to take place at Covent Garden Theatre, on Friday next, when he will play "Othello."

The Prince's Theatre will be closed next week for night rehearsals of "Called Back," a new play by Messrs. Hugh Conway and Comyns Carr, and "The Private Secretary" will be transferred to the Globe.

At the Opera Comique, Miss Lotta is announced to appear on Monday next, in an English version of the French three-act vaudeville of "Nitouche," with the original music by Hervé.

There was a very gratifying demonstration of public goodwill and respect on the occasion of the departure from Portsmouth of Prince and Princess Edward of Saxe-Weimar on Saturday, on the termination of the Prince's military command of the Southern District. In a district order on giving up the command, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar expressed his sincere thanks to all heads of departments, staff, and commanding officers for the valuable assistance they had at all times rendered to him. In bidding farewell to officers, non-commissioned officers and men of all ranks, his Serene Highness assured them that it was owing to the hearty co-operation and support which he had received at their hands that the duties of the command had been rendered easy, and that he would always be able to look back with feelings of pride and pleasure upon the five-and-a-half years which he had spent at Portsmouth in command of the Southern District.

THE Times of Thursday contains a paper from a correspondent on "Routes for an Army from Cairo to Khartoum," on which, as the conclusion at which the writer arrives is one which we have constantly combatted, it may be worth while for us to make a few observations. The statement with which the paper opens, "that the Nile route might seem to afford the best means of transport between Khartoum and Cairo," is one which the object of the reasoning and assertions which follow appears to be to dispute. The grave disqualifications of the circuitous course and of the cataracts or rapids of the river are first set forth. Now, it is not true that the course of the Nile is "extremely circuitous." It is one of the few great rivers of the world which flow nearly due north and south, and a glance at the map will show that, with the exception of the great detour of over 400 miles between Abou Hamed and Korosko, the course of the river is singularly straight. Again, it is not true that it runs "in many parts upon shallow or upon rocky beds." There are but six points, if so they may be called, in a distance of 1,900 miles, where the rocks at low-water bar the river to the passage of any boats but noggahs or dahabeeahs. It may be admitted that from March to July it would not be safe to attempt the descent of those rapids with boats of much draught of water, although there would be less danger in towing them against the stream. If the opinion of the Sheiks of the various "Cataracts," as they are inappropriately termed, six in number, were asked with respect to the feasibility of passing a flotilla of Nile boats from Cairo to Wady Halfa, we believe they would be unanimous in asserting that it could be done without risk. The account in the Times of the route from Cairo to Assouan is fair and accurate, and there are obviously no difficulties on that part of the journey to prevent an expedition by the river up to Assouan, aided by the rail as far as Assiout. The First Cataract at Assouan offers no serious impediment. Even at low Nile boats of 30 tons can, according to the writer, be towed against the stream, through the passages in the rocks, the railway from Assouan to the bank opposite Philæ of which he speaks being of little use. Messrs. Cook, who have got a monopoly, which they use in an exceedingly generous manner, of the Nile steamboat navigation, send their passengers on camels or donkeys from Assouan to Philæ (crossing over a little bit of desert) that they may re-embark on board their steamers above the Cataract, and they never use the railway except for heavy baggage and provisions. These steamers, supplemented by steam-launches, would be quite sufficient to tow a large flotilla up to Korosko. And now comes the blot in the case made out by the Times against this river route. The writer assumes that it is contemplated to cross the desert from Korosko to Abou Hamed—ten days' journey by camels, with no water fit for human use, and 230 miles of a "howling waste." How is it to be traversed? "There is nothing like leather," the engineers say. "Down with railways! Sink cisterns! Furnish tanks!" &c. The labour of months, with no certain results, except a good deal of suffering and a tedious march! Why take it at all? Why should not a force that has got to Korosko continue its career south by the river? There is no obstacle whatever, at least as far as Wady Halfa. When they arrive at Wady Halfa, there is, certainly, about six miles to the south, what is called the Baten-el-Hagar, or the Belly of Stone, a succession of rapids, the force and danger of which lessens as the Nile rises. If an expedition were to start in the month of August from Cairo, it would find high water by the time it arrived at the Second Cataract. But, at all events, a trans-shipment could be effected at Abouseer. We do not pretend to say that between Korosko and the Second Cataract it is perfectly plain-sailing, but with local pilots and ordinary care there is no risk to boats going up stream; and the wind is generally straight up, or down. The north wind prevails for three-quarters of the year, and all the native houses are built with the entrance towards the south. At Semneh, further south than Abaiseer, there are considerable difficulties; but all the obstacles presented along this part of the river, from end to end, are not so great as would be offered by one day's march through a sandy desert. The Nile, between Wady Halfa and Hanneck, at which place the Third Cataract has to be encountered, is described as very rapid. And here the Nile changes in its character, and the villages become rather more frequent as we approach New Dongola. All along the river are traces of the ancient occupation of the country by the dynasties of the Egyptian Kings. From New Dongola to Debbah by boat is five days' journey; from Debbah to Meröe four days. Twenty miles lower down the stream, although the river is actually north, we come to the Fourth Cataract. From Abou Kareet to Berber is three days of camel transport. At Berber we may halt in the comparison, for whatever difficulties may be presented in a march to Khartoum are common to both routes, as they join at this point. Now, in this brief description, there is, we think, a demonstration that the arguments summed up in the Times' article are not convincing. We enumerate them:—No. 1. A railway journey of 254 miles from Cairo to Assiout. Surely not a great drawback. But even that would not be necessary; for 10,000 men could be placed at Boulak on dahabeeahs, and towed up to Assouan, if there was any object to be gained by it. No. 2. Disembarkation from railway and embarkation on steamers and barges, 334 miles of river from Assiout to Assouan. This is open to the same remark. No. 3. Disembarkation from steamers at Assouan and railway journey of seven miles to Philæ. Railway journey not necessary at all. Disembarkation required for some of the troops and stores, which a very short march would bring into communication with the Nile above the First Cataract, and journey by river to Korosko, where begins the route across the desert to Abou Hamed. Why it should be considered necessary to state the objections to it in such detail, we cannot conceive. We have over and over again insisted that the Nile, the whole Nile, and nothing but the Nile, is the route for an expeditionary force. Starting with the hypothesis that the idea of Korosko and Abou Hamed desert route is not to be entertained, we find—in a minor degree, we admit—the objections presented by the desert in the alternative route from Suakim to Berber; which is fifteen miles longer. But the writer, who has evidently given considerable thought to the arguments in favour of his projects, says nothing of the difficulties and risks to be encountered in the despatch and carriage of the expedition to Suakim itself. In a very short campaign two steamers were lost with all their stores in the passage between Suez and Suakim, and three of her Majesty's ships touched on the reefs or bands in the vicinity of that most dangerous coast. We start with one disembarkation at Suakim, from whatever point the expedition may proceed. Having arrived and established a basis of operations at Suakim, we have next to face the desert. The expedition must set out with tubes and boring apparatus to establish supplementary wells, and must form a fort at each well for 245 miles in the desert. The correspondent's description of the country is certainly very flattering. When we read of "herbage" between Suakim and Berber, "fuel and forage, and the frequent shade of trees," we can only hold up our hands in wonder. But the same fervid imagination has covered the region with large flocks of sheep and goats, and a good deal of grain, and plenty of brushwood! It is by no means true that "cavalry could be easily employed" along the whole course of the desert, for in places the sand is exceedingly deep and shifty, so that the troopers' horses would find it anything but pleasant travelling. Nor is the prospect opened for the conveyance of the sick over this 240 miles of desert at all comparable, in our estimation, to that presented by the Nile, where sick and wounded, if any, could be placed on board the noggahs and floated down in comparative comfort. At the end of the article we come to an admission which we accept with pleasure. "Besides the route from Suakim to Berber, and that by the Nile and across the Korosko desert, there is," says the Times, "a third way of advance which is no doubt practical, and has many advantages. It is to follow the Nile along the whole of its course to the objective point!" Having arrived at this conclusion, we say "Amen!" There is light at last! Doubtless, the military authorities, who are now engaged in studying the problem, should it be necessary to solve it, have arrived at this decision also.

IN an article in a recent number of a popular magazine, Earl Grey, referring to our Naval power, stated that "notwithstanding the large sums yearly voted . . . . it was doubtful whether the Navy was in an efficient state," and this may be taken as the view of ordinary civilians. It is assumed that very large sums are spent on the Navy, and that what is required is better administration of this large income. Accordingly, when the Navy Estimates come on for discussion in the House of Commons we find, as we remarked last week, that the debate has degenerated into squabbles over details, which are chiefly treated in a tu quoque spirit, between officials and ex-officials, to an audience of empty benches. Even when a speaker like Lord Henry Lennox, or Sir John Hay, urges that our ships are insufficient in number, that they are ill-armed, or that we have few torpedo-boats, the debate promptly resolves itself into the old groove of "what has been done with all this money which has been so liberally voted?" and, scared by the bugbear of "entering upon a fresh era of Naval expenditure," few determined efforts are made to drag it out of the Slough of Despond in which Naval officers are accustomed to see the matter allowed to sink. Now, it is this King Charles's head of Mr. Dick's, or "ce maudit galère" of one of Molière's heroes, that we should like to see kept out of the discussion, for once, at all events; and so we will endeavour to treat it—though we should not wish to be understood as inappreciative of good administration or economy. We hold with most Naval officers that more money is what is now required, that the Navy has been starved of recent years, and that increased Estimates are our present want, if we are to maintain a Navy at all commensurate with our requirements. In confirmation of this statement, we propose, as far as possible, to avoid figures, and to appeal to facts within general knowledge, and to speak of the Estimates in round numbers, which are not likely to be disputed. As far as it is possible to do so, we shall also avoid special reference to foreign Powers; but we must assume as facts that other countries, and notably France and Italy, have in the last few years made great efforts, by having a consistent programme involving a large expenditure, to increase their naval forces. Even the Secretary to the Admiralty, in his recent speech on the Estimates, was obliged to admit this, for he says that "when the present Government came into office, they found that other countries had gone ahead, and that it was necessary to effect a great change of armament;" and it is an undoubted fact that this is not the only respect in which they had "gone ahead," while their exertions have certainly not relaxed in the last four years. Let us quote again from Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, who states truly that we live in "changing times," and that "torpedoes, machine and quick-firing guns, and hydraulic and electric machines, together with some other things he could mention, accounted for some delay in completing ships." Granted. But how much more apposite to this long list of expensive changes and improvements would be the statement in the mouth of the Secretary that they accounted for a large increase in the Estimates. Yet the Estimates are not increased; indeed, they are practically reduced, as there is a larger non-effective vote. Year by year we have Estimates similar to the last, a few thousand pounds reduced here and put on there, showing, "as compared with last year," a net reduction generally of a few thousands. Referring to an article in the Nineteenth Century by Admiral Sir Spencer Robinson, written in March, 1880, the Admiral mentions that in that year, in round numbers, £10,500,000 were wanted for the Navy, when only two years previously "the vote of credit for £2,000,000 had enabled the Naval Administration to supply admitted deficiencies," and he tells us what in that year we got for this expenditure. It will be seen then that, allowing for the vote of credit, our expenditure on the Navy was quite as large four years ago as at present, while for the three following years it has remained constant between £10,000,000 and £11,000,000. Let us follow the Admiral in his statement of armoured ships, which amounted at that time to 66 (omitting 3 monitors for India and Melbourne), 31 of which he considered to be in fair and good condition. Comparing this list with the Admiralty return of March this year, we find that the latter gives only 62 armoured ships, 42 of which—viz., 28 in commission and 14 in reserve—are stated to be ready for sea, but in these 42 are included "ironclads" such as the Viper, Vixen, Scorpion, and Cyclops class, vessels deducted from effective ironclads by the Admiral as "condemned as unfit for sea service." A study of this return would be of great interest, but we have no space for more than a general statement that, making similar deductions from our present list of 42 effective ironclads to those made by the Admiral, we should reduce our number to 30, or one less than his estimate of four years ago. To sum up the comparison between 1880 and 1884, we have, then, four ships less all told, and one less immediately available for commission, than we had. It is true that we are building a few good ships; but, on the other hand, the return before us shows, from the dates at which the boilers were put on board, that our older ironclads are being much depreciated as fighting-machines, and that most of them require extensive repairs. Such, then, is the state of our Ironclad Fleet. We ask sadly, is there any branch of Naval power in which we have made any advance of late years, while other Powers have been "going ahead?" Are our cruisers or small craft satisfactory? Is it not the case that most of our small ships are ill-armed dummies, slow steamers and without machine-guns? Has the armament of our Fleet advanced rapidly? or is there not general complaint on this score? Have we a large proportion of torpedo-boats? Let those who heard Mr. Yarrow's lecture at the United Service Institution answer. Is it satisfactory to hear that we have only 19 first-class boats to the Russian 115, the French 40, the Italian 18, and the 70 ordered this year by Germany? Of what does all this speak but a "starved Navy?" Our ships have got larger, and they are more expensive. We have more machinery, torpedo-boats, machine-guns, and electric lights. All these modern improvements are expensive; and it is futile to expect our ships to be supplied with these necessities of modern warfare on the Estimates of a dozen, or even half that number, of years ago. We unhesitatingly affirm that, excellent as our personnel undoubtedly is, in matériel we are fast dropping behind in the race; that the number of our available ironclads is actually decreasing, while they are not as well supplied with modern improvements as those of foreign Powers, or in any respect as efficient as they should be. The remedy for this is only to be found in larger Estimates. We certainly write in no party spirit, and we know that the obstacle is rather with the Treasury than with the Admiralty; but in all seriousness we do advocate a fresh era of Naval expenditure. We add one word of comfort for the economists. It may sound a paradox, but it is unquestionable, that if there were more expenditure we should be more likely to get our money's worth. For the sake of show we have a large programme of ships building, money for each individual ship being doled out so slowly that they are five or six years in construction instead of three, causing much expense in alterations. Men are taken off one job for another, at great economical loss, when after a burst of spasmodic energy it is found that the money voted for the year is nearly all expended; and many more instances might be given. But in our view these are secondary matters. To sum the matter up in a few words, we state advisedly that our Navy is starved, that our ships are not efficient, and that more money must be voted to make them so.

SIR E. HAMLEY "preached to the converted" yesterday at the Royal United Service Institution "on the advances of Russia to India." The Duke of Cambridge was not present, nor do we see the name of any War Office "authority" in the list of the company; but Lord Napier of Magdala, Lord Chelmsford, Sir W. Codrington, Sir H. Rawlinson, Sir H. Green, and many "Indians" attended, though the theatre was by no means as much crowded as the interest of the subject, and the eminence of the gallant lecturer as a strategist and military writer and actor, would have led one to expect. Of the lecture itself we may at once say it was characterised by the force and clearness which Sir E. Hamley always displays in his literary exercises, that it was delivered with sententious solemnity appropriate to the subject, and with due emphasis on the many telling points which were put to the hearers, and which were received with much applause. The lecture was, in fact, a State paper on the military situation, and was a pregnant commentary on the difficulties of the position created by the advances of Russia since December, 1878, when General Hamley delivered a lecture in the same room on "The North-West Frontier of India," with special relation to the attitude of our disagreeable friend and all but neighbour in that direction. Beginning with a survey of the question as it was in 1878, Sir E. Hamley pointed out that the independence of Merv gave us a certain sense of security, but that even then the prospect of seeing the Russians there disturbed our repose. Skobeleff's paper, translated for the Morning Post by Mr. Marvin, had revealed the designs of Russian officers on Afghanistan; but certain politicians denied that India was threatened by Russian advances, and held that immense difficulties lay in the way. However, since 1880 the steps towards India have gone far beyond the prognostications of those who two years before were branded as "alarmists." In an able summary, the lecturer described the extraordinary progress made by the Czar's Generals and politicians, and having set forth the spread of her garrisons, her railways, and her resources, he pointed out the effect of the influence of Russia on Persia:—

> "In 1880 the Government of India had actually resolved to place a Persian garrison in Herat for the protection of British interests. But in the following year, after Skobeleff had established himself at Bami, a remarkable change occurred in the attitude of Persia. Ostensible orders to the contrary notwithstanding, he was allowed to procure vast supplies of provisions from Khorassan; and when, after the capture of Geok Tepé, he marched beyond Askabad in pursuit, he was allowed to violate Persian territory without remonstrance, and the Turcomans who escaped into what they supposed to be the neutral territory of Persia were handed over as prisoners to the Russians. In fact, how can Persia, without the strongest support, resist such a neighbour? The Russian border is coterminous with hers from Mount Ararat to beyond Askabad. The fleet on the Caspian, and the new railway, give Russia the means of invading at a hundred points the bordering territory, furnishing a hundred good reasons why Persia could no more oppose the will of Russia than the mere human being of her own tales could oppose the tremendous spirit who rose in clouds from the sea, or descended on overshadowing wings from the sky. There is nothing, therefore, to prevent Russia from continuing to push her railway forward. The line from Askabad to Herat has already been surveyed by a Russian agent, and found to offer no difficulties."

To Merv Russia came at last:—

> "It is remarkable that the Russian Government never positively denied all intention to take Merv. On the contrary, it avowed that occasion might arise to cause its annexation. But there have never been wanting British politicans to deny, or to make light of, the imputed design. (Cheers.) At length that design was consummated, and the dates in February last may be studied by those who desire to see how it was effected, and to what extent it has stimulated the public expression of our apprehensions. Commercially viewed, Russia has gained in Merv for the present merely a fresh burthen. The Turcomans, debarred from brigandage, and unfit for any sustained commercial or agricultural enterprises, will be but an impoverished community. They possess no towns, nor institutions, nor territory, which exhibit any mark either of prosperity or of the faculty of becoming prosperous. The one advantage of the possession is that the caravan route passing through Bokhara to Meshed and the interior, and that from India by Herat to Central Asia, lie through Merv. But that it was once a centre of great prosperity is proved by the fact that the remains of four great cities exist there, the inhabitants of the last of which were driven out by the present semi-barbarians about a century ago. Under Russian rule that prosperity will revive,—the land will once more teem with the crops to which nothing is wanting but good husbandry. And, when once again become populous and fertile, it will afford a secondary base against the Afghan frontier. In the meanwhile it closes the gap aforesaid, and as soon as Russia lays down her frontier line, the whole of that vast empire from the Baltic to the Danube, thence along the Black Sea, across the Caucasus to the Caspian, along the Persian frontier to Merv and Turkestan, and so on to Siberia, will lie in a ring fence."

The next steps and their consequences were set forth with much power and lucidness, and the intrigues of Russian officers with Shere Ali were alluded to, with their sequel in the Afghan War:—

> "Though the war ended in the destruction of Shere Ali, and the defeat of the Afghan army and the occupation of the country, Stolietoff's mission, so far as it was a cause of the war, created for us difficulties in this border territory which cannot yet be said to have ceased to harass us; and it is also to be observed that it was sent at a time when no cause of quarrel with England existed, to a State with which Russia had no necessary relations, for the sole purpose of causing us serious injury and trouble. Whilst I have thus endeavoured to include in a general view the means which Russia possesses of undertaking a serious enterprise against our Indian Empire, I would not be thought to desire to convey the idea that a war of invasion is imminent. . . . . . But, on the other hand, it is impossible to say how far she might be tempted if she saw us lying at such disadvantage as would seem to promise her certain and easy success—if, for instance, we should be in great embarrassments in India or elsewhere, while the approaches to its frontier were almost unguarded."

In the event of Russia resolving on such an enterprise, the lecturer remarked:—

> "In his plan of invasion, Skobeleff thought that 50,000 men might undertake the enterprise without risk of disaster. That is about the force which the army of the Caucasus put in the field in Armenia in 1877, when the great mass of the Russian army was on the Danube. In any circumstances, then, the army of the Caucasus, after leaving ample garrisons in occupation of the fortresses and depôts, could easily direct 50,000 men on Baku. The time necessary for the movement beyond the Caspian must be measured by the means of transport on the railway. Two years ago the terminus was at Kizil Arvat. We need not look far forward to place it at Askabad, and may count with some certainty on seeing it before many years have passed at Sarakhs. We may assume that on the railway the very moderate number (it being only a single line) of 12 trains a day can run. At the very moderate rate of 12 miles an hour, which seems to be that maintained at present, the journey would occupy 40 hours. The successive detachments would arrive, then, easily in two days at Sarakhs. A division may be conveyed complete in 36 trains. Thus in six days a division would be assembled at Sarakhs, ready to move as the advanced guard. An army corps, with all its equipments and departments, would be conveyed in 165 trains in 17 days. It would then be 200 miles, say, another 17 days' march, from Herat. Thus, adding a day for the crossing of the Caspian, the army corps from Baku would be assembled at Herat in 35 days, or five weeks. But if the single division were sufficient of itself to march on Herat, it would reach that point from Baku in about three weeks. A single train a day suffices to supply an army corps with food and forage; and a single railway more than amply suffices for all supplies and reinforcements required by an army four times greater than that I have been supposing. Consequently, the railway could supply any additional force such as might be forwarded from Russia to the Caspian viâ Petrovsk; while the free use of the roads through Khorassan, from Astrabad to Sarakhs or Herat, is another highly important element in estimating the strategical advantages which Russia will possess. It may be looked on as certain, therefore, that in a few years Russia will possess the means of at once entering Afghanistan, at the outset of a campaign, with the advanced guard of an army, the forces of which will be drawn and maintained from all the resources of the Empire. Also, the advance of a corps from Turkestan upon Cabul is even more practicable than formerly. And it is quite possible that the preparations for such a movement may be completed before we are aware, because they will all take place within her own territory."

An excellent précis of the strategical condition of defence followed the exposition of the Russian means of attack:—

> "I have said nothing about a British occupation of Herat. Yet that too was open to us four years ago, and not only open to us, but contemplated, in certain contingencies, by the Government of India. If I refrain from speaking of it, it is because I fear at the outset to excite the opposition, and possible refusal to consider any forward movement, of those who are already hampered by the opinions they formerly expressed. I am aware, too, of the strong reasons that exist against straining our resources by embracing points so distant in our first operations. But I will confess that as an abstract military plan for the defence of India under present conditions, and supposing sufficient additional troops to be forthcoming, that which most strongly recommends itself to my mind is a strong British Government at Candahar, wielding an army whose advanced troops should be at Cabul and Herat, based on Kurrachee, with railway communication at least thence to Candahar. I believe it is considered that great part of such an army could be supplied from our present Indian forces. However, I will not enlarge on this plan, though I imagine it is what a strong Power, thinking more of security than expense, might be expected to adopt. But, assuming that we wish to keep our hold on this rampart of India, it is urgently necessary to take steps while the Russian preparations are still undeveloped. We must at once obtain such a settlement of its boundary as I have endeavoured to sketch. And military reports on the whole country, from this frontier to positions securing or commanding Herat, and thence to the Helmund, should be framed forthwith. Our ignorance of all this is, considering its importance, astonishing. While Russian officials have explored up to and beyond Herat, and elsewhere along the Afghan and Indian frontier, our own officers have been discouraged, indeed prohibited, from obtaining personal knowledge of those regions; so that the scanty information I have been able to give about them is from those who acquired it almost by stealth. . . . . . The frontier is most important to us, yet no one can say where the frontier is. In a few years we may be fighting on the Helmund or the Hari Rood, yet we know nothing of the military features of the region. The country, made up of discordant parts, is held together by no strong rule, which we refuse to supply, while a rival Power, whom it would task all our resources to meet with every advantage in our favour, and which knows no scruples, will soon be in a position to enter it."

In one word, we must occupy Candahar, and await our enemy in advance of the right bank of the Indus in a fortified position. How long? And if he does not come there? In fact, the dangers of the developments of Russian power on the Afghan frontier to the peace of our Indian Empire are more easily indicated than the remedies which we can apply are readily applied. Our best defence of India lies behind us,—in the content and prosperity of its people and princes.

The Channel and Reserve Squadrons will not be combined this year for their summer cruise.

Captain Fisher has been obliged to relinquish the command of the Excellent, temporarily, owing to the precarious state of his health. He has never thoroughly recovered since he was prostrated by his exertions at Alexandria. The Admiralty have granted Captain Fisher a lengthened period of sick-leave, to enable him to undergo a thorough course of medical treatment.

Rear-Admiral W. H. Whyte hoisted his flag on board the Agincourt, as second-in-command of the Channel Squadron, in succession to Rear-Admiral Wilson, on Tuesday, May 13.

The report of the Council of the Royal Naval School deals at length with the "gratifying accounts of the success of former pupils," but we notice that the Malcolm University Scholarship, the University Scholarship, the Assistant-Clerkship, and the two Cadetships, as well as the Yarborough Naval Scholarship, have not been awarded, and that the diminished number of pupils has caused a falling-off in the receipts for board and tuition. The annual general meeting will be held at the Royal United Service Institution on May 22, and notice of strenuous opposition to certain changes to be proposed has been given by one of the Council.

A report reaches us that Vice-Admiral Rice will be relieved by Prince Leiningen in July as Commander-in-Chief at the Nore. It has so often been erroneously reported that the Admiralty were about to employ his Highness, that we begin to despair of ever seeing him hoist his flag. A rumour reached us not long since that the German Government had made the Prince a tempting offer to join the Imperial Navy, which, we hear, was declined with thanks.

The operations on the East coast of the Soudan were attended by two disasters at sea. A large Egyptian transport proceeding with stores, &c., to Baker Pasha at Suakim became a total wreck, and the s.s. Neera was lost on a coral reef in the neighbourhood of Suakim on February 21 last, when conveying troops to Trinkitat to General Graham. A Court of Enquiry at Alexandria, composed of Staff Commander Stevens, H.M.S. Invincible, Mr. John F. Russell, H.B.M.'s Vice-Consul, and Captain Paul, of the s.s. Sesostris, having heard the evidence of the officers of the ship, found that the Neera had been lost on a reef not marked on the Admiralty chart, and completely absolved Captain Jenkins and Mr. Stephenson from all blame, the Court adding a recommendation that the part of the coast where the Neera struck should be re-surveyed as soon as possible. It seems to need explanation that the survey, if it be true, as stated in Court, that H.M.'s ships Humber, Hecla, and Ranger all grounded in nearly the same spot shortly after the Neera struck, was not ordered long before. The navigating officer of H.M.S. Humber actually made an official report to the Admiral, a duplicate of which was produced in Court, to the effect that the reef was not marked on the chart; and this fact was also established by observations taken on the spot by Captain Jenkins and the chief officer, which were entered in the official log-book. The Neera struck at a time when the sky was overcast and the water smooth. The reef was ten feet under water. The ship was under the control of a pilot, who had been strongly recommended, and was going at half-speed at the time.

The Greenwich Hospital Pension of £50 a year for Fleet and Staff Surgeons, vacant by the death, on April 15, 1884, of Retired Deputy-Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets Henry Liddell, R.N., has been conferred by the Admiralty on Retired Deputy-Inspector-General David Lyall, M.D., R.N., from that date.

In Nos. 37 and 38 of the Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung, the criticism of the English expedition to the Eastern Soudan is continued. The following passages, dealing with the critical moment of the battle of Tamanieb, deserve to be cited:—There are critics who attribute the disintegration of the square, which ended finally in complete dissolution, to the fact that the troops at the head of the square were ordered, in the heat of the struggle to attack, so that they became entirely separated from the troops forming the flanks, who had to make front frequently for firing. The writer cannot, from his own experience of war, blame the officers who called upon their men to advance rapidly for the disorder which ensued; for who, at a moment when everything depends upon carrying his troops with him, would stop to consider whether the flanking columns were following closely? On the contrary, the troops forming the flanks are to be blamed for stopping to fire instead of following the tête; for it is hardly to be assumed that the latter would have been able to advance far, seeing that the enemy swarmed all round the square to such an extent that the flanks had to meet the cold steel of the Arabs. It should be mentioned, in further justification of the men at the head of the square, that in the preceding battle of El Teb the formation of square was by no means strictly adhered to, but that it was entirely abandoned in the attack on the principal position of the enemy, when the two flanks wheeled round to the front. At that time, the abandonment of the square formation was not prejudicial,—on the contrary, very advantageous; yet no voice was then raised against it, and now the troops at the head of the square are to be made solely responsible that the latter was loosened by their rapid advance. The question whether one or two squares or an open formation were best in a campaign like the Soudanese is (the writer thinks) open to much discussion. Whether General Graham acted upon instructions or upon his own judgment in choosing the square remains immaterial. But, as the sequel showed, it was very fortunate that he departed at Tamanieb from his previous tactics of advancing in one square. If there had not been a second square at Tamanieb upon which the broken one could retire, the consequences would have been very serious, perhaps disastrous. The latter battle shows that, even in a struggle with undisciplined hordes, no leader should dispense with a reserve. A further reason of General Graham's for using the square may have been the motley composition of the expeditionary corps. It is much easier to employ in a solid body troops thrown together haphazard than to handle them separately in a line of fight. Notwithstanding all these considerations, however, the writer is unable to become enthusiastic for fighting either in one or two squares. He is of opinion that an advanced column, firing rapidly, and followed by a main column, ready to fill up gaps in the front, and to face promptly flank attacks, would have given better results also against the Soudanese enemy. Those two bodies, advanced and main, formed in company columns, ought to have been followed by a closed column acting as a reserve. Considering that the Arabs fired but little, the three bodies might have been placed at close intervals, which would have decreased the danger of being beaten and broken up separately. It happens, even with the most veteran troops, that at some point in the line of fight the connection is loosened, momentary disorder ensues, and the moral of the troops is slightly shaken here and there. All that is required in such cases is to localise the disorder and movement towards the rear, so as to prevent a general panic. That this was unsuccessful in Davis's brigade was due to the formation chosen, and the writer is therefore inclined to judge more leniently of the temporary check than the General-in-Chief. The English soldier has shown in the numerous colonial wars of recent times what he is able to do when put on his mettle; and the rapidity with which the overthrown brigade of General Davis rallied again once more fully proves the discipline and sangfroid for which the English troops are distinguished.

EGYPTIAN NEWS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT).

Egypt is the country of miracles and riddles, so the following need cause no surprise. An extraordinary meeting of all the great men in the country took place at the Abdin Palace a few days ago. It was a general summons, Patria in periculo, and up hurried Cherif, and Riaz, and Nubar, with all Ministers, past and present. The meeting only took twenty minutes, but during that time—and this is the miraculous part of it—every one of the eleven members present spoke for at least half an hour. Now, this beats all the puzzles of my childhood, and yet it is a fact, a positive fact. I will tell you how I know. Each one has repeated to me exactly what he said in the council, or said he said, and as, speaking with great volubility, each took half an hour to repeat it, they must have taken at least as long to say it, even barring interruptions. And eleven times thirty minutes is five hours and a half, so that won't do. It is clear that they all spoke at once, and even then, how about the extra ten minutes? I believe the problem is to form part of the next examination papers of the Egyptian Army. If you ask me what they said, I reply, with Mr. Silas Wegg, that it is a matter I would rather explain when ladies are not present, or in columns which ladies are not likely to read, for the language would appear to have been very strong indeed. The incapacity of even the leading men in the country to recognise the salutary advantages of British reforms, even when accompanied by increased brigandage is very disheartening.

. By this mail leaves Blum Pasha, the nominal Under-Secretary but actual Minister of Finance, with a brief interval, since the disappearance of Ismail Pasha Sadyk. Blum Pasha goes to London, in connection with the proposed financial conference. He is not only an extremely able man, but perhaps all round one of the most popular men in Cairo.

An amateur performance in Cairo for the benefit of the widows of soldiers killed during the recent expedition, deserves mention for more reasons than one. In the programme was originally the well-known "Ici on Parle Français." The title seemed suspicious, and a committee of diplomatists were moved to study the play. Finding among the characters a Frenchman who spoke broken English, they at once recognised that this might hurt the susceptibilities of "la grande nation." General Stevenson was, I understand, requested also to study, with a view to ascertaining whether the forces at his command were sufficient to preserve order under a provocation so intense. Finally, the whole question was submitted to Mons. Barrère, the French Minister, who had the sense to recommend that the young actors and actresses should at once commence the study of their parts; but in view of the critical state of politics in Egypt, it was finally decided to avoid anything which might cause a rupture in the friendly relations between the two Western Powers, and the inflammatory play was accordingly withdrawn. In spite of this contretemps, the evening was in every way a success; and during the performance the Khedive forwarded a purse of £100 as a contribution to the fund on behalf of the Vice' Reine and himself. A somewhat similar entertainmen-took place in Alexandria on behalf of the Sailorst Home. Officers of both services contributed to the amusement of their guests, while a temperance lecture and a new rendering of "Kathleen Mavourneen" served to check any undue tendency to hilarity.

The Marines have been ordered from Alexandria to Suakim, but nothing is yet known as to the 60th Rifles returning. Obituary.

Major-Gen. W. G. Lennox, late of the Bengal Army, has died at Glasgow, aged 87 years. He entered the Bengal Army in 1818, served throughout the campaign in Afghanistan from 1839 to 1842, including capture of Ghuznee, Khelat, Candahar, Istalif, and Cabul (medal). Received bronze star for services at Maharajpore; was engaged in the Sutlej campaign in 1846 (medal). Was for some years in command of the 43rd Light Infantry, and in 1853 he was transferred to the 22nd N.I., which was stationed at Fyzabad, in the province of Oude, at the outbreak of the Indian Mutiny in 1857. With his wife and youngest daughter, he was preserved during this troublous period, nearly all the other officers of his regiment, and of the force which he commanded at Fyzabad, having been put to death by the mutineers, or having died in attempting to escape. His regiment having mutinied, and been struck off the strength of the Bengal Army, Col. Lennox was transferred to the 63rd N.I., and continued to serve in that capacity till his retirement in 1861.

It is officially notified that serjeant-instructors of musketry have been appointed to each battalion of Infantry serving at home, and that the non-commissioned officers who formerly held these positions may be reappointed.

THE CHANNEL SQUADRON.

Our Correspondent, writing from Gibraltar on May 5, says:—The 1st Division—the Minotaur, the Sultan, and the Neptune—left Malta on Monday forenoon, the 21st, and were joined off Gozo by the 2nd Division—the Agincourt, Achilles, and Northumberland—which had left Syracuse the previous day. When we were a few miles outside the harbour the Sultan hauled out of the line, and made a signal that her engines were disabled. The 1st Division stopped, and the Admiral made a signal to send out tugs to her assistance; they soon appeared, and towed her back into harbour. As it was known that her repairs would take several days, we did not wait for her, but as soon as she was fairly in tow proceeded on our way to the westward. We were not long before we picked up a strong head wind, which lasted the rest of the passage. It became so bad that on Thursday we put into the port of Bougie, under the lee of Cape Curbon, and remained there till the next morning. After making a fresh start it was but little better, and we made but slow progress, and arrived here on the morning of Thursday last, the 1st. The Admiral landed in the forenoon, but dispensed with the customary salute and guard of honour. It being the anniversary of the Duke of Connaught's birthday, the ships were dressed with masthead flags, and a Royal salute fired at noon. The same afternoon Sir John Adye left by P. and O. steamer for England, and Major-Gen. Mark Walker was sworn in as acting governor. We were expecting to go to Bantry Bay from here, but it has been officially given out that we are to go straight to Portsmouth and Plymouth, and give a week's leave to each watch. The Humber came in yesterday, and leaves to-day, homeward bound; the Hecla passed yesterday, also homeward bound, but did not call in. The combined bands of the Squadron played on the Alameda on Saturday evening. The Sultan arrived this morning at 9.30, having left Malta on Sunday, the 27th; the defect in her machinery was a crack in the gudgeon of her after-engine, which necessitated its being taken out and replaced by the spare one. We leave to-night at 6 o'clock. The Forward, which has been acting as despatch-vessel to the Squadron for the last few months, is about to leave us; she has been ordered to the West Coast of Africa, and leaves for that station next week.

The Squadron has returned to England, and the two Divisions are now lying at their respective ports, where they are giving leave and refitting. We left Gibraltar on the evening of Monday, the 5th, and rounded Cape St. Vincent on the morning of the 7th. We experienced a head wind all the way up the Portuguese and Spanish coast, but when fairly in the Bay, were able to make sail. Ushant was passed at 4 o'clock on Sunday afternoon, the 11th, and soon afterwards the two Divisions separated; the Second Division, Agincourt, Achilles, and Northumberland, arrived in Plymouth Sound the next morning; and the First, the Minotaur, Sultan, and Neptune, at Spithead, in the evening. We had, while on the passage, several days at steam tactics and the usual drills. While we were at Gibraltar, the Duke of Edinburgh issued a memo. containing a copy of a letter which he had received from Sir Arthur Boston, Governor of Malta, in which Sir Arthur expressed his satisfaction at the general good conduct of the men of the Channel Squadron while on general leave at Malta. Only slight defects are being made good, and one week's leave given to each watch; as the ships are to be ready for further service at the beginning of next month, when it is understood that we are to proceed to Bantry, for torpedo work.

GOOD-SERVICE REWARDS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Would any of your friends who are in Parliament elicit from Government their reasons, based on equitable grounds, for reducing good-service rewards to retired colonels? The reward should be £100 a year, but in case of retirement it is subjected to a deduction of four-tenths its value, but why, no army man or naval man either can understand. There may be civil superannuation acts we don't know of, but they should not be applied to military men; besides, the reward is not ordinary pay, and is for distinguished service rendered in time past, and generally in the field, the value of which does not vary.—I am, &c.,

A FRIEND.

[We cannot tell whether any Member will ask the question, or if there will be a satisfactory answer to it.—ED. A. & N. G.]

The Complete Guide to Company Drill in Close and Extended Order. By Capt. W. Eldon Serjeant. (W. Clowes and Sons, Limited.)—The object of Capt. Serjeant is to supply a want which many young officers experience whilst getting-up "company drill" from the "Field Exercise, Part 2," wherein they are referred to various sections for information as to the details of movements. Capt. Serjeant's book is arranged in the form of a progressive catechism, containing the entire elements of the subject. The author's attention has been mainly directed to the proper arrangement of sections as in the "Field Exercise." All the half-company and section movements are treated very fully, and particular attention paid to the cautions and words of command. This little guide, which may be carried in the waistcoat-pocket, will no doubt receive proper patronage.

Biographies of Celebrities. By Frank Banfield. (John and R. Maxwell.)—This little book opens with a sketch of the lives of Liberal politicians; of course, giving the first place to Mr. Gladstone. Then follows a sketch of the lives of Conservative politicians, including Sir M. Hicks-Beach, Lord Randolph Churchill, and Earl Cairns. The list of leading divines includes the Bishop of Winchester, Rev. Newman Hall, Cardinal Newman, Archbishop of Canterbury, Cardinal Manning, Rev. Stopford Brooke, Bishop of Durham, and the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon. Among eminent literary men we find Lord Tennyson, John Ruskin, Matthew Arnold, J. A. Froude, Robert Browning, Wm. Black, G. A. Sala, and William Morris. We cannot say much for the illustrations, but independently of them the book deserves attention as a useful and handy work of reference.

The Trojan War. By Professor C. Witt. (Longman and Co.) Translated from the German by Frances Younghusband.—If The Story of the Trojan War proves as successful as did "The Myths of Hellas," by the same author, he can have no cause to complain. "The Myths of Hellas" has made its mark by telling the story of the "Iliad" in simple language, and it has obtained a popular place among children's books. It now remains to be seen whether its successor, The Story of the Trojan War, will fare as well; and certainly the chances seem to be greatly in its favour. There can be no doubt that it possesses the elements which engage the interest of even young children. This, Professor Witt claims to have been proved by experience. Then comes the question how this book is to be regarded from the point of view of education, and the author at once points out how it will be a pure gain that school-boys in the later years of their school-life should approach the "Iliad" with that familiarity with its matter which such a volume as the present, followed, perhaps, by Pope's "Homer" or some other, as chance may offer, will without fail have given. The contents of the volume cover 16 chapters of most interesting matter.

Practical Guide to Photography. By Marion and Co. —Messrs. Marion and Co. have recently published a new work on photography, which can justly claim to be a thoroughly practical and complete guide for amateurs and photographers. From this manual the student may derive abundant information as to the mode of producing negatives, also of printing, connected with the different processes. The author observes that the substitution of the dry-plate process for the wet has entirely revolutionised the art. Comparison between the new and old processes is very striking; in the wet process the manipulations were intricate and dirty, now the work is extremely simple and clean, the time of exposure is reduced, and the apparatus required for out-of-door work is light, handy, and compact.

Nineteen Centuries of Drink in England. By R. Valpy French. (Longman and Co.)—A considerable portion of the contents of this well-intended volume will prove, no doubt, familiar to many readers who perused them when passing through a series of numbers in a London weekly journal. The real object of the work is to ascertain the part which drink has played in the individual and national life of the English people. Such being the object in view, a rather amusing, as well as interesting, inquiry is instituted into the beverages which have been in use, the customs in connection with their use, the drinking vessels in vogue, and the various efforts made to control and prohibit the manufacture or introduction of strong drinks. In entering on these inquiries the author has adopted a division of the subject into periods, commencing from a date when facts were forthcoming. The title of this work is no doubt a startling one; but the author has evidently shared no pains in rendering it attractive and useful. He must have waded through oceans of curious literary works to enable him to put together so many reliable facts. But at the close of his efforts to effect good, we find him thus writing:—"Still intemperance, like a myriad-headed monster, rears its hideous head, and the usual thirty millions sterling, in the shape of taxation, rolls into the lap of the reluctant Chancellor of the Exchequer. —reluctant, for so they would have us understand their attitude towards their gains from a nation's indulgence." In 1874 Sir Stafford Northcote thus speaks in his Budget speech:—"If the reduction of the revenue derived from spirits be due to other causes, if it should be due to a material and considerable change in the habits of the people, and increasing habits of temperance and abstinence from the use of ardent spirits, I venture to say that the amount of wealth such a change would bring to the nation would utterly throw into the shade the amount of revenue that is now derived from the spirit duty." The author of this work has by its publication afforded ample opportunities to many readers to ponder over the information which he has offered to them. It merely remains to say that in doing this he has reproduced some striking incidents having reference to "Nineteen Centuries of Drink in England."

14th West Yorkshire Regiment. Our Journal says:—"We were very glad to observe the appointment of Major Hutchison as Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. for Musketry a short time ago. He left us towards the end of last month; and much as we in the regiment regret losing the services of such an officer, we cannot but feel that the right man has been put in the right place—shall we say?—for once. We all saw his advancing and disappearing targets a short time since, and they certainly turned out very successful. Major Hutchison only returned to the regiment about six months ago, after having held the appointment of Commandant of the Calcutta Volunteers for five years."

A "party" writes to us as follows:—"Your pages have never failed to bear testimony to the valour and gallantry invariably displayed by the Corps of Royal Marines. I would ask you then if (bearing in mind the affair of the 'Gilsland,' and the very obvious attempts of those in power to repress in the late campaign the military ardour of the corps) it seems to you that the choice of them now for garrisoning the scorching Red Sea littoral,—now when all the laurels have been gathered and the trophies of victory laid up in the Temple of Fame,—is a token of the indulgent regard of the authorities for men who have served them so nobly and so well? They yearned to serve in the field, and as few of them as possible were allowed to unsheath their swords. They desired to be put in the fore-front of the battle, and the men were sent insufficiently officered to serve as stop-gaps, while their officers were left to cool their heels (as well as their military ardour) in Malta. They asked bread and are given a stone,—a burning stone of the Red Sea littoral; they asked an egg and are given a scorpion,—a scorpion of the torrid Soudan. Is that true which has been whispered to me, that they are selected for this trying and inglorious service because (bend your ear that I may whisper faintly, lest the birds of the air should hear—should hear and carry)—because they can be put to it upon ordinary English pay? But, dear Mr. Editor, I am really uneasy (and I have a right to be, as you will readily admit when you know who I am), and I should like to ask if any one can tell me whether all is being done that can be done to make life in those garrisons something more than an utmost improbability,—whether experienced doctors able to cope with fever, ague, cholera, et hoc genus omne, have been sent out, and sanatoriums and a regular system of constant 'reliefs' been established. If not, it will be no longer Vœ Victis, but Vœ Victoribus. I should like to know, because I remember all about the 'Gilsland' (though that is so long ago—nearly three months!), and because I have been told the Marines are likely always to get more or less scurvy treatment till one of their own Generals is asked to take his seat on the Board of Admiralty. Do answer me if you can."

The return of the Royal Marines to their ships in the Mediterranean Squadron has been the occasion of most enthusiastic hospitality on the part of the blue-jackets. There were many dinners, of a more or less private nature, given by captains of ships, ward-room officers, and gun-room officers in their own messes to the returning warriors, at which speeches were delivered evincing the most genuine good feeling between the two branches of her Majesty's Navy, the sailors and marines. But there were two dinners so clearly marking the existing feeling that some announcement should show how highly the Royal Marines appreciate the good opinion of their comrades the sailors. On the 2nd inst., the blue-jackets of H.M.S. Alexandra invited the marines of their own ship to a banquet on their quarter-deck. Everything was done that hospitality could suggest and liberal purses supply. The decorations were profuse and beautiful. The viands excellent beyond description, and nothing could vie with the good spirits of all. Major Colwell's speech was a masterpiece of wit, and the men were specially touched by the feeling way in which the Major alluded to the noble self-denial of those sailors who bore poor wounded Royds to Trinkitat (nine miles) after the toils of the march to El Teb and the fighting, returning to camp ready to proceed to Tokar next day. But this dinner was due to the enthusiasm and hospitality of the blue-jackets alone; the officers of H.M.S. Alexandra invited the officers of the battalion to dine on the following day, and Capt. Rawson was there to meet them. The decorations of the table, in the most perfect taste, were fashioned into a floral device, "Per Mare, per Terram." The speeches and the cheers of the gallant naval officers, with honours galore, brought tears to the eyes of more than one of their guests. Major Colwell was borne round the ward-room by his messmates, and the Captain's galley was manned by the officers (Com. Campbell, stroke, Capt. Rawson in the stern sheets), and the officers of the Royal Marines were pulled to their own ships.

Col. Tuson and Major Colwell landed at Malta on April 27, to await passage to England. Col. Tuson had, however, to be sent to hospital, ill of typhoid.

Lieut. Ashton, R.M.A., together with the detachments of Marines for the Alexandra and Superb, arrived at Malta on April 27.

The following officers of the Royal Marines served in the battalion through the recent campaign in the Soudan: Col. Tuson, C.B., A.D.C., R.M.A., commanding; Major Colwell, R.M.L.I.; Brevet Majors Tucker and Allen, R.M.A., and Schomberg, R.M.L.I.; Lieuts. Kysh, White, Prendergast, and Rogers, R.M.L.I., and Aston and Brittan, R.M.A. Capt. Poe, R.M.L.I., was adjutant at El Teb, where he was wounded. Capt. Baldwin, R.M.L.I., acted as adjutant at Tamai, having joined the battalion with the East India and China Marines from Suakim. Lieut. Kysh performed the duties of transport officer. The detachments have now returned to their ships in the Mediterranean, where they have been most heartily welcomed by their shipmates. Col. Dygard's battalion has left Ramleh for Suakim.

68th Durham Light Infantry. Lieut. C. Hervey Bathurst has arrived from India in the Euphrates.

69th Welsh Regiment. Lieut. H. Humphreys, who distinguished himself in the Soudan, died at Cairo last week from the effects of an accident. The deceased obtained his commission from the ranks, and had earned for himself a high reputation by his zeal and ability.

71st Highland Light Infantry. Lieut.-Col. J. H. Campbell, late of the regiment, died at Barrie, Ontario, on the 31st inst. The deceased was youngest son of the late Mr. J. Campbell, of Craigie, Ayrshire.

Mahony, C.M.G., retired (April 22). There are ten district offices of various kinds held by retired officers of the Department, and six Cavalry and 22 Infantry regiments are without paymasters,—hence 38 officers are required to complete the full establishment of the Department.

Ordnance Store Department. The Cape News of April 1 states:—"One of the most impressive military funerals seen for a long time past in Cape Town took place yesterday, on the occasion of the interment of the remains of Mr. Fraser Browne Melliss, late Deputy-Assistant-Commissary of Ordnance. The large assembly of officers and civilians at this sad ceremony bore ample testimony to the kindly affection in which the deceased, who died on March 28 at the early age of 31, was held. Among those present were the representatives of his Excellency the Governor, in his two aides-de-camp; Gen. Sir L. Smyth, C.B., K.C.M.G.; the officers of the several branches of the garrison; and of the D.E.O.V.R. The cortége left the Military Hospital at 4 o'clock, the gun-carriage, whereon was borne the coffin, covered with the Union Jack and surmounted with the deceased's sword and helmet, being dragged by the Volunteer Engineers. The coffin, thus borne through the line of the men of the 58th Regt. and of the Rifle Volunteers, and accompanied by the band, was conveyed to the cemetery, where the impressive service was performed by the military chaplain, the Rev. R. Thomas, after which the customary volleys were fired over the grave by a party of some hundred of the 58th Northampton Regt."

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

Worcestershire Regiment. In the general order recently issued, giving the results of the musketry practice of the Militia for the year 1883, the 4th Batn. has a figure of merit of 61·31, and appears as the second best shooting battalion in the whole Militia. But the battalion, unfortunately, was only able to fire up to 500 yards, in consequence of the 600 yards range being reported unsafe, so that it was seriously handicapped, notwithstanding which, it far out-distanced all other regiments except the first on the list. The 3rd Batn., Royal Scots Fusiliers, appears as the best shooting battalion, with a figure of merit of 63·36, only two points higher than the 4th Worcestershire, although it had the advantage of firing another 5 rounds at the 600 yards range. Practically, therefore, the 4th Batn., Worcestershire, is the best shooting battalion in the Militia. The 3rd Batn., Worcestershire occupies fifth place, with a figure of merit of 55·62. The shooting of the regt. has been steadily improving for the last ten years, and one of the battalions has been within the first three since 1880.

According to Col. Harrison Trent, Inspector-General of Musketry for 1883-4, 61 battalions were exercised, firing five rounds at each of the distances of 100, 200, 300, 400, 500, and 600 yards, together with five rounds in volleys and five rounds in independent firing, both at 300 yards. The practice appears to have been of a very low order, the "very good" being nil, the "good" three, the "moderate" ten, while the practice of the remaining 48 battalions is classed as "bad." Forty-eight battalions were not exercised for reasons assigned. The best shooting battalion is the 3rd Royal Scots Fusiliers, with a figure of merit of 63·36. This battalion also produces the best shooting company (C), with a figure of merit of 74·79, and the "best shot," Serjeant M. M'Pake, 99 points. Of the permanent staff, 1,801 completed the course, 260 qualifying as marksmen, 255 receiving the marksman's prize of £1 and badge, and 5 the badge only; 1,980 were exercised in judging-distance practice, 198 of whom received the prize of 10s. each. Thirty-three permanent staff serjeants of the three battalions of Engineer Militia executed the course of the Militia rank and file, and three obtained the prize of £1, with scores of 70 and upwards. The Channel Islands Militia were trained for the first time with the Martini-Henry rifle, and were exercised through the range practices laid down for the Line. The first 15 battalions in order of merit, with the averages obtained were:—3rd Royal Scots Fusiliers, 63·36; 4th Durham Light Infantry, 57·17; 4th North Lancashire, 54·13; 4th South Wales Borderers, 53·27; 4th Gloucestershire, 53·22; 3rd East Surrey, 53·17; 4th Devonshire, 53·13; 3rd Wiltshire, 51·44; 3rd Norfolk, 48·24; 4th Lincolnshire, 46·76; 3rd Seaforth Highlanders, 46·27; 4th Bedfordshire, 46·14; 3rd Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, 45·81; Royal Anglesea Engineers, 45·80; and 3rd Yorkshire, 45·31.

At the examination to be held in September next, and at each of such future half-yearly examinations, 75 commissions will, until further notice, be allotted to the successful competitors.

Service Questions in Parliament.

Army Pensioners.—In reply to Col. O'Beirne, the Marquis of Hartington said on Monday that it was proposed to make arrangements in the New Royal Warrant whereby pensioners could revert to service in the Army and count their time towards their pension.

At the reopening of St. John's Church, Lewes, last week, the Bishop made a gratifying allusion to the stained window recently added to that edifice in memory of Lieut. Luckraft, H.M.S. Cormorant, who was shot in action with the natives of the New Hebrides, on March 16, 1882:—"The officers of his gallant ship committed his body to the deep, but they desired that some further monument of their attachment to a brave comrade should be placed where he spent his youth and manhood, so that those who loved him might have it always before their eyes." We may add that, besides his brother officers, several friends in Sydney, New South Wales, aided in this memorial, which forms an affectionate tribute of their good feeling to one who gained the esteem and affection of his professional brethren, as well as of all those with whom he was brought in contact in private life; and these will, we feel sure, appreciate the gratitude of his father (who is well known throughout the Naval service) and the members of his family. Some of the officers who served under Lieut. Luckraft in the Cormorant were present at this ceremony.

Indian Army.

Hyderabad Contingent. After a career extending over a quarter of a century in the Contingent, 17 years of which were as commandant of the 4th Cavalry, Col. A. A. Johnson vacated the command on April 1 at Aurangabad. He entered the Army in March, 1853, joined the Contingent in Aug. 1857, and in 1867—when only a captain—was appointed commandant. Col. E. Hill, second-in-command, being now on furlough, Major Walker is appointed pro tem. Col. D. Shaw, commandant 3rd Infantry, H.C., at Jalna, has also vacated his command. Consequent on Capt. Gilchrist being appointed officiating military secretary to the Resident, Lieut. G. Adye has been appointed second-in-command 1st Cavalry, at Bolaram, and Lieut. Oswald, officiating adjt.

Apparently there must be a plethora of ox-tongues in the Victualling Yard, says the Western Morning News, as it has been officially notified that the officers in command of her Majesty's ships are in future to have their supplies of this article on the basis of "a baker's dozen." This supply of tongues to captains on their assuming command of a ship is one of the few quaint and antiquated customs which still obtain in the Navy, and it is marvellous that some Admiralty official, with an eye to economy or a craving for retrenchment, has not long since had these tongues sold for the "benefit of the Crown"—a euphemistic phrase which covers all sorts of petty meanness.

In future all officers who, on completion of 20 years' service while in the grade of squadron or wing-officer, have failed to qualify for promotion, will be removed from regimental employ. This order will come into operation on Nov. 1, 1885.

Competitors at the examination for the Royal Military College, which will be held on July 1 next and following days, are requested to observe that the regulations issued with G.O. 113 of 1880, mentioned in the previous notice on the subject, have been modified as regards the forthcoming examination, to the following extent,—i.e., paragraph 19 of the regulations issued with G.O. 113 of 1880 has been abrogated, and the marks allotted to geometrical drawing have been raised to 500.

The jewel presented by the inhabitants of Portsmouth to Princess Edward of Saxe-Weimar, manufactured by Mr. Dimmer, jeweller, High Street, Portsmouth, is in the form of a crescent and star, composed entirely of diamonds, 65 in number. The ornament can either be worn as a bracelet, brooch, or hair-pin. The bracelet, to which it can be fixed, is a very massive plain band of fine gold, bearing the following inscription:—"Presented by public subscription to H.S.H. Princess Edward of Saxe-Weimar, as a token of respect and esteem, and some slight testimony of the high appreciation in which she was held during the period she resided in Portsmouth.—Richard Marvin, Mayor, May 7, 1884."

Active Service cannot wear out the teeth that are brushed night and morning with Rowland's Odonto, the purest and most fragrant dentifrice ever made. All dentists allow that neither washes nor pastes are as efficacious for polishing the teeth and keeping them sound and white as a pure and non-gritty tooth-powder; such Rowland's Odonto has always proved itself. Ask any dealer in perfumery for Rowland's Odonto, and avoid spurious imitations, theirs being the only original and genuine Odonto.

London Amusements.

◆

The Italian Opera, Covent Garden, has presented during the week a varied and attractive programme. Madame Albani has been enthusiastically welcomed in "La Traviata," and on Tuesday night Madame Sembrich was most cordially received by a numerous audience. The twelvemonths' tour in America of this favorite vocalist has in no degree affected the capacity of a singularly powerful voice, and her embodiment of Lucia di Lammermoor, first identified in London with her personal popularity, is as remarkable as ever for brilliancy of florid embellishment. Signor Cotogni was Enrico, and Signor Marconi Edgardo. "Mefistofele," with Madame Albani as the heroine, was the opera assigned to Thursday evening, and this (Saturday) night Madame Sembrich appears in "L'Etoile du Nord."

The Gaiety programme is now varied by a revival of Mr. R. Reece's three-act burlesque drama of "The Forty Thieves," originally produced here four years ago. Miss Constance Gilchrist is the successor to Miss Kate Vaughan as Morgiana; but Mr. E. Terry, Miss E. Farren, and Mr. E. W. Royce advantageously resume their former positions, as Ali Baba, Ganem, and Hassarac. Mr. Craven's pleasant little comedy of "My Preserver," brought out at the Strand about ten years since, supplies a lively prelude to the briskly acted extravaganza.

At the Opera Comique, Miss Lotta has appeared as the vivacious heroine of the musical comedy of "Nitouche," which had a long run last year at the Variétés, Paris. To suit our insular requirements the original French story, devised by MM. Meilhac and Millaud, has undergone certain modifications, and it can hardly be said that Hervé's music is fairly rendered by a company having no special capabilities as vocalists. The unflagging and unconventional humour of Miss Lotta enables, however, a very merry evening to be passed watching a succession of farcical incidents more suggestive of drollery than probability; and Mr. R. Pateman as an irascible major, and Mr. Wyatt as the diffident organist who has composed a comic opera, help to secure the favourable reception of an absurdly whimsical production.

"Haunted Lives," at the Olympic, first played in the provinces a few weeks ago, is a stirring melodrama by Mr. J. Wilton Jones, possessing some strong situations and attractive pictorial effects of a sensational kind, among which may be recognised the vividly realistic stage picture of a ship on fire. Miss Alma Murray as the much-suffering English wife, Miss Rose Leclerq as a mysterious Russian countess, and Mr. Philip Beck as the vigorous declaimer against the conspiracies of Nihilists, figure prominently in the five acts of an elaborate drama appealing to the sympathies of playgoers who prefer exciting incidents to polished dialogue.

At the Criterion Theatre, Mr. Charles Wyndham will on Monday evening revive "Fourteen Days." Early in June will be brought out Mr. James Albery's version of Theodore Barrière's three-act comedy of "Tête de Linotte," produced at the Vaudeville, Paris, in September, 1882.

Mr. Henry Irving will occupy the chair at the thirty-ninth annual dinner of the Royal General Theatrical Fund, which takes place at the Freemasons' Tavern on Thursday, the 29th inst. On the following Saturday, Mr. Henry Irving will resume his performances at the Lyceum with the comedy of "Much Ado About Nothing."

A new one-act play called "Chatterton," written by Messrs. Henry Arthur Jones and Henry Herman, will be introduced to the public on Thursday next at a special morning performance given at the Princess's Theatre.

On Monday evening at Toole's Theatre the comedy of "The Upper Crust," written by the late Mr. H. J. Byron, will be revived, and displace "A Mint of Money," already acted 111 nights in succession.

A new first part will vary the programme of Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's entertainment on Monday night. It is entitled "Fairly Puzzled," and written by Oliver Brand, the music composed by Hamilton Clarke.

At the Westminster Aquarium, some trained elephants, horses, and African lions have been this week exhibited as "Wilson's Novelties from India." This day (Saturday) a grand Volunteer fête is announced in commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the Auxiliary Force.

On May 19, a new piece will be produced, entitled "Fairly Puzzled," written by Oliver Brand, the music composed by Hamilton Clarke, at German Reed's. Mr. Grain's new sketch, "A Little Dinner," and the after-piece, "A Double Event," will still be retained in the programme.

A series of experiments, which commenced last August, have just been concluded at Portsmouth with a new Woolwich pattern torpedo. The new projectile is of the same dimensions as that already in use, but is worked by more powerful engines, requiring a less consumption of compressed air, thus enabling the charge of gun-cotton to be nearly doubled; while an increased speed of six knots an hour is attained. At the final experiment 10 consecutive good shots were made at 600 yards, the torpedo travelling at the rate of 26 miles an hour.

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks, avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies, are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda water, will be found the least objectionable. Eno's Fruit Salt is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the powers of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use Eno's Fruit Salt, therefore no family should ever be without it. CAUTION.—Legal Rights are protected in every Civilised Country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. Directions, in Sixteen Languages, how to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at Eno's Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 17, 1884.

WHEN the Princess Badroulboudour accepted a new lamp, in exchange for the old one by which Aladdin ruled the Genii, she made, as she afterwards discovered, a sad mistake. Unfortunately, she lacked the discretion shown by the Committee on Commissariat and Transport Organisation this week, which baffled a similar attempt to substitute a brand-new article for the old lamp which had its special value, In the course of the Parliamentary inquiry into the discomforts which had to be borne by the Army in Egypt, caused, as it is alleged, by want of foresight on the part of those who equipped the Expeditionary Force, it was represented that the troops were supplied with oil lamps, whilst candles were given to them instead of oil for purposes of illumination. Unimportant as such a mistake may appear, in comparison with the more serious mismanagement by which all the flour and a large portion of the hay and mules were delivered in an unserviceable condition, the error was so clear a proof of bungling that it has a great significance in the present inquiry. The production, therefore, for the inspection of the Committee, of a lamp which, by a certain stretch of imagination, could be said to meet the double purpose of an oil reservoir and a candlestick, was worthy of the astute Timorkan of the "Arabian Nights." The chairman of the Committee, who is the head of the department whose doings form the subject of investigation, produced from a cupboard a brown paper parcel which, on being opened, turned out to contain a large lantern, gleaming in all the glory of blue glass and bright pewter, and when it was explained to the Committee that by unscrewing the top of the reservoir, a candle could be put into the hole, and the lamp made to serve a double purpose, the Committee wavered. But unfortunately for Timorkan, the Committee, warned by the Aladdin of the old lamp, that the substitute offered was a lantern made for a special purpose, escaped the imposture of Badroulboudour. Failing to be warned by the readiness with which the House of Commons acceded to the request of the Member for Glasgow for the appointment of a Committee, the Department, instead of acknowledging its mistakes and failures, attempt to make light of them, as this lamp incident showed. The Directors seem unable to perceive that the feeling which moved the House of Commons is strong throughout the country; that the time has come when public money must not be wasted, or the safety of British troops put in jeopardy by maladministration. Prompted by this support, let the Committee, in the careful and straightforward course it is now pursuing, keep in its hands that wonderful lamp which brings to those who invite its aid that most powerful of all Genii,—Truth.

"Norcott of the Rifle Brigade." It does not matter much, perhaps, to any one but the brave and chivalrous veteran who is still amongst us, whom the gentlemen at the Horse Guards and War Office "select" as the recipients of their favours for the colonelcies of the battalions which carry on the business of the old 95th. And even Sir W. R. Norcott, K.C.B., must feel so fully satisfied that the work of "Bill Norcott" will live in the memory of the corps for ever, that he may treat as of little moment the preference given to the gallant and distinguished officers who have been passed over his head. It was Sir A. Horsford's luck—and he deserved it—to have a turn of active service in a great campaign after Norcott had added to the family honours and to the regimental reputation in the Crimea, just as it was General Lawrence's luck to purchase over Norcott's head the promotion which blossomed into such luxuriance that "Young Bill" is now obliged "to peep under his huge legs," and seek in vain to find the beloved jacket which he and his have illustrated in famous fields. General Lawrence entered the Brigade five years after Norcott. The transfer of a General officer from the colonelcy of one regiment to that of another is based on association with the corps. Norcott's father was appointed to the Brigade when it was raised, served his life in it (till 1830), commanded the 2nd Battalion at Waterloo, having fought in it from Corunna all along the line. His uncle was killed in it at Corunna; and what Norcott did with his wing, which did everything but fly, at the Alma and elsewhere, is matter for history more lasting and equitable than that of Mr. Kinglake.

Lieutenant-General Payn handed over his divisional command to Major-General H. Rowlands last month, and is now en route to England.

Sir Lintorn Simmons has had an encounter with "the powers that be," previous to his impending departure for Malta, and we rejoice to hear that he has been successful, and that he has beaten them all along the line. An opportunity seemed to those who are always on the look-out for reductions in the salaries and allowances of other people—and who, strangely enough, seem to think that charity begins at home, and ends there—to be offered by a change of Governors for a small economy. Sir Lintorn Simmons, however,—not on his own account so much, perhaps, as for the sake of those who are to come after him—resisted the attempt to reduce the pay, salary, allowances, and emoluments of the office to which he has been appointed. Probably the idea of the reduction was suggested by the example of his predecessor, who certainly managed, according to all accounts, to do what is called "living within his income," and who set an example of splendid economy at Government House,—which, however, was a departure from the traditions of the office and from the round of hospitalities which the warmth of the climate and the limited resources of the inhabitants render so peculiarly welcome. Everyone must have read with pleasure the letter which the new Governor did not think himself prohibited by his official relations with the Government from writing to the Press, respecting the operations for the relief of his comrade Gordon, and the policy which hitherto has been confined to the delivery of words in that connection.

Colonel Sir H. Gough, lately removed from the 12th Bengal Cavalry, under the limitation ruling, will remain in India in acting command, vice Brigdr.-Gen. Hill, coming home on leave.

The Marquis of Salisbury, in proposing the "Army, Navy, and Reserve Forces" at the Constitutional Association dinner on Wednesday night, touched upon rather dangerous ground. His lordship's desire to give a slap to the Government in addition to the many they have received, and of which many think they have deserved a larger allowance, introduced a ticklish topic, when he spoke of "the attitude of the Army and Navy towards the powers that rule them being worthy of extreme admiration." His Lordship would scarcely approve of any expression of opinion on the part of the services respecting the policy of the Government, and we cannot think that he was judicious when he spoke of their being "constantly engaged in carrying out a policy that they did not understand, and exposing themselves to death and danger for a cause which was never rightly explained to them." Quite rightly "they fight for the worst Ministry as ably and as gallantly as they do for the best, only remembering that they are serving their country and their Queen." Surely Lord Salisbury would not have them do anything else? On one point he will have the support of all those who were present with the Soudan Expedition. There "is no difference of opinion whatever as to the skill with which their movements have been directed."

Lieutenant Kitson, 60th Rifles, has been appointed A.D.C. to Major-General Lyons, at Aldershot.

We have reason to believe the announcement of the World, that Colonel Sir T. D. Baker will be offered a transfer from Dublin to Simla as Adjutant-General, Sir R. Greaves's time will expire on November 1. If the Duke of Connaught comes home on leave next cold season, General Greaves will officiate for him, and ultimately will receive the offer of a divisional command.

Lady Baring and family left Alexandria for Trieste on the 29th ult. by the Austro-Hungarian Lloyds Steam Navigation Company's mail steamer, and will proceed to Gratz in Styria, where her ladyship proposes spending the summer. Major Macdonald, Military Attaché to her Majesty's Agency, left by the same steamer. His Excellency Baker Pasha, accompanied by Mrs. Baker and family, left on the 29th ult. by the Messageries Maritimes, and arrived in London on Monday night. His Excellency hopes his wound will be thoroughly healed to permit his return to Egypt within three months, for which he has been granted leave of absence.

The Royal Artillery still continues over 1,000 gunners short of its establishment. This state of affairs attracts no attention either at the War Office, in Parliament, or in the country. And yet in such an arm it is a very serious deficiency.

We are rather in difficulties about the Channel Tunnel. It is humiliating to confess that we are afraid of being invaded by France through a perforation under the sea, or, as Sir John Adye puts it, that we are "to be terrified by a rat-hole;" but, nevertheless, there is solid military objection, we think, to the "right little, tight little island" becoming continentalised. We must bear the taunt that our soldiers and our sailors are afraid of offering facilities to our neighbours for the occupation of the Tower of London and the Bank of England. Possibly, if the project had not been patronised by Sir E. Watkin, and by the South Eastern and Channel Tunnel Railway Company, there might have been a better feeling towards it; but, on the whole, we rejoice that the coup de grâce was given to the Bill for making the Tunnel by the division in the House of Commons on Wednesday, when 222 Members voted against the second reading, which was supported by 84 of the enlightened Members who fear nobody and care for nothing which stands in the way of what they call progress. From a professional point of view, perhaps, it would be well that the Channel Tunnel were made, as it is the opinion of all who are connected with the services, except a few theorists like Sir John Adye, that a large increase of the Navy and Army would be necessary,—by no means a bad thing for anybody but the taxpayers, who in the end would reap the benefit. Some there are who, no doubt, think that the Tunnel would perforate the insular objections to compulsory service which offer such a permanent resistance to the creation of an effectual military organisation, as well as the strata below the sea. It would, perhaps, be a great price to pay; but the Tunnel and Conscription would, we really think, make England safer than she is, although we certainly should prefer Conscription without the Tunnel.

A modification of the rules applying to short leave from India is in contemplation. The announcement will give general satisfaction. The rules now in force have been modified from time to time, but there still exist hardships. For instance, a General officer commanding a division can give six months' leave, which might be taken on full pay if spent in India. But officers who avail themselves of the privilege cannot proceed to England. They may, it is true, apply for six months or less from the Commander-in-Chief for the purpose of visiting England, but under these circumstances, they are only allowed English pay whilst absent from India; officers of the British service, other than those on the Staff, can proceed to England on Indian pay, only when taking their accumulated privilege leave of ninety days for that object; officers who hold Staff appointments and are seconded in their regiments, may take four months' leave on private affairs, but have to forfeit all claim to the higher rate of pay. The proposal now is to extend to all officers the right of taking six months' leave to England on Indian pay.

The Militia Vote was rapidly passed through Parliament this week. Little or no discussion took place on the deficiency of 29,000 men, and no steps appear to be contemplated by the War Office to increase the efficiency of the force.

The appointment of Colonel G. G. Walker, 3rd Battalion, Royal Scots Fusiliers, to the vacant Militia A.D.C.-ship, vacant by the death of the Duke of Buccleuch, is a well-deserved compliment. Colonel Walker is recognised throughout the Militia service as a most able and zealous commanding officer, and the degree of efficiency to which his regiment has attained, is shown by the position it invariably occupies in the Musketry Returns, and the number of its officers who have qualified at the Schools of Instruction. Colonel Walker may be pointed to as evidence of the force of good example.

We are authorised to state that the Queen has approved of the military parades, &c., usual on her Majesty's birthday, being held on June 28 at all home and foreign stations, with the exception of London and Windsor.

Instructions were sent out some time ago directing Lieutenant-General Smyth, Commanding at the Cape, to proceed to Etshowe to report to the home authorities as to the position of affairs there. Upon the General's reports it will depend whether the whole of the troops should be withdrawn from that port, or steps should be taken to reinforce the garrison.

On his arrival in London, Baker Pasha, who has been suffering considerably on the way home, submitted to a medical examination, the result of which was a decision that an operation was necessary, to extract irritating substances beneath the surface of the healed-up wound. On Thursday morning Surgeon M'Cormack, who has acquired great skill and reputation by an extraordinary course of practice in many fields of military surgery, cut open the wound and extracted two pieces of bone, one of which had to be removed by the saw. The Lancet says:—"When a probe was introduced, exposed bone could be felt at a depth of rather more than two inches from the surface. There is partial loss of sensation in the cheek, side of the nose, and right half of the upper lip: also slight convergent strabismus, and decided difficulty of accommodation of sight with the two eyes. After cutting down and exploring the deeper portions of the wound, two loose pieces of necrosed bone were discovered and removed; none other could be found. A fracture, with loss of bone substance, could be felt in the floor of the orbit. The operation was somewhat prolonged, in consequence of the depth at which the dead bone was situated. So far, the patient is progressing favourably."

Sir Thomas Symonds has challenged Mr. Bannerman to prove the truth of his assertion in the House of Commons that "the document put forth by this gallant officer (Sir Thomas Symonds) was only about £1,300,000 out in a very obvious calculation which could be made by any one." There is an old saying that "figures can be made to prove anything," so we anticipate it will not be a difficult task for Mr. Campbell-Bannerman to prove that two and two make four. Should he take no notice of Sir Thomas Symonds' challenge, the natural inference will be that the Admiral of the Fleet was right.

The King of the Sandwich Islands has been much annoyed at the want of respect shown to him by Captain Doughty, on April 13, when the Constance failed to salute the Hawaiian flag. The Hawaiian Army had manned the battery, ready to return the expected compliment, but were disappointed. What made matters worse was that when the British Commissioner, Major Wodehouse, left the Constance after an official visit, the usual salute was fired.

ALEXANDRA. Flag Lieut. the Hon. H. Tyrwhitt left Cairo on May 6 for Assouan on special service.

ASSISTANCE, Capt. St. Clair, arrived at Portsmouth, and went into harbour on May 9.

AUDACIOUS, Capt. Pearson, flagship of Vice-Admiral Dowell, was at Hong Kong on April 7, preparing to visit the northern ports in May. The news of the death of the Duke of Albany reached the admiral by telegraph on March 31, and at noon the Audacious hoisted her colours half-mast and fired 21 minute-guns. La Galissonière (French flagship), Stosch (German flagship), and the Christofero Colombo, and a battery on shore paid the same tribute of respect to the memory of the Prince. Until the day of the funeral, the colours were hoisted half-mast, no salutes were fired, and no bands played. On the day itself, ships in harbour hoisted mast-head flags at the dip, and minute-guns were fired before sunset. Then the colours were rehoisted and hauled down, the bands playing the National Anthem.

BOADICEA, Capt. Edmund Church, flagship of Rear-Admiral Nowell Salmon, was at Simon's Bay on April 23; the Sylvia was at Simon's Bay, refitting; the Opal left Simon's Bay, April 21, senior officer on West Coast,—she will visit St. Helena and Ascension, and arrive at Cape Coast Castle end of May; the Alecto and Stork were on the West Coast of Africa, in the Bights; the Goshawk was on the West Coast of Africa, on the south sub-division.

CRUISER, Com. S. C. Darwin, arrived at Cagliari from Malta on the 13th inst., and is expected to leave to-day.

DARING, Com. Ching, relieved the Linnet at Canton on April 2.

DEFENCE, Capt. Pollard. A court-martial assembled on board the Royal Adelaide at Plymouth on April 29, for the trial of William Jones, A.B., on a charge of insubordination. Lieut. A. H. S. Elwes ordered the prisoner aloft, and in reply to another order he said "All right" in an unnecessarily loud tone. He also refused on deck to "double." Com. C. C. Forsyth stated that the prisoner was very insolent. The Court sentenced the prisoner to three months' hard labour. A court-martial assembled on board the Royal Adelaide on Monday, for the trial of Charles Hawkings, Royal Marines, on board the Defence, who was charged under the Naval Discipline Act, 1866, with refusing to execute the lawful commands of Capt. Hayes and Serjt. Harris, in that he did not take off his greatcoat when ordered to do so. Serjt. Harris stated that when he told the prisoner to take off his greatcoat, the latter asked to see an officer first. Did not hear the captain ask his coxswain to fetch his mackintosh. Witness heard several men ask what they should do to keep themselves dry without their greatcoats; but Capt. Hayes said it was not raining then, so that the men must take off their coats at once. Did not hear Capt. Hayes say, "I don't care a d——; I won't have the men working with their greatcoats on, whether it is raining or not." It was customary for the Marines to wear overcoats in rainy weather. Capt. Hayes said there were no grounds for the prisoner's refusal, as he had given a direct command. It was raining very slightly at the time. He might have made use of an oath at an interview with the prisoner. Did not notice anything disrespectful in the manner of the prisoner, nor did he see any of the other officers or men wearing overcoats. Overcoats were not necessary, as it was raining but a very little. Hawkings was sentenced to three months' hard labour.

EURYALUS, flagship of Rear-Admiral Sir W. N. Hewett, K.C.B., V.C., was at Massowah, up to April 26. The Coquette was at Massowah; would remain; the Briton and the Ranger were at Suakim; the Myrmidon was at Suakim on May 10. The Sphinx had returned to Massowah from Aden (arrived at Suakim on May 10); the Arab and Woodlark were at Aden on April 30.

FIRM, Lieut. and Com. G. Izat, arrived at Sheerness on Saturday from Queensferry.

FLY, Com. Hope, over three years in commission, left Hong Kong on April 2, for the northern division of the station.

FORWARD, Lieut. and Com. Furlonger, left Gibraltar on Thursday last for the West Coast of Africa, to relieve the Starling, ordered home.

FROLIC, Com. Arthur W. Moore, arrived at the Cape of Good Hope on May 11.

HECLA, Capt. A. K. Wilson, arrived at Portsmouth on Saturday last from the Red Sea.

HUMBER, Com. Cæsar Hawkins, arrived at Portsmouth on May 11.

INVINCIBLE. Com. Henderson has been appointed to the temporary command, Lieut. Grieve assuming the duties of commander, and Lieut. Poore those of first lieutenant.

KESTREL, Com. Tisdall (act.), left Hong Kong, homeward bound, on March 29, after a very long commission.

MINOTAUR, Capt. Britten, with the Sultan, Capt. Sir W. H. Grubbe, and Neptune, Capt. Maxwell, in company, arrived at Portsmouth on Monday evening from the Mediterranean, having left Gibraltar on Monday, May 5. The eastern division, with the Duke of Edinburgh, proceeded to Spithead; the western division, under Rear-Admiral Wilson, consisting of the Agincourt, Capt. Mead, Achilles, Capt. Butler, and Northumberland, Capt. Robinson, steamed for Plymouth, where it arrived about 6 o'clock on Monday morning. When parting off Ushant the Duke of Edinburgh signalled his good wishes to Rear-Admiral Wilson, who has relinquished his position as second-in-command, having been succeeded by Rear-Admiral Whyte. During the stay of the Squadron in harbour only slight damages are to be remedied, for which no more than a fortnight will be required. Six months' stores and provisions, as well as torpedo stores and apparatus, will be taken on board, for the experiments in Bantry Bay, to which the Hecla will accompany the Squadron. About 1 o'clock on Sunday morning, after a beautiful moonlight night, the Squadron suddenly found themselves in a thick fog, and the two lines lost sight of each other. The steam "siren" was sounded, guns were fired, the water-tight doors were closed, and speed was diminished; it was nearly 4 o'clock before the fog lifted to enable the Squadron to proceed. On Sunday night another fog began to set in, but the Admiral increased speed and managed to clear it. Vice-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh hauled down his flag on May 14, and proceeded on ten days' leave of absence, to visit her Majesty the Queen at Windsor.

The officers of H.M.S. Havannah, commission 1855-59, under the command of the late Admiral Thomas Harvey, dined together, after their annual custom, at St. James's Hall on the 14th inst. There were present Admiral C. F. Boughey (first lieut.), Com. Thomas A. Hull (master and pilot), Pymr. Henry J. Ray (assist.-pymr.), Coms. J. C. Best, W. Casberd-Boteler, and C. McLaughlin (midshipmen), and Staff Com. E. C. du Bois Phillips (master's assistant). Martin R. Smith and Charles R. Smith, Esquires, were the guests.

ROYAL NAVAL COLLEGE, GREENWICH.

The College began their cricket season on Saturday, May 3, with a match against the Royal Military College, Sandhurst. The match was played at Sandhurst, and resulted in a victory for Greenwich. On Saturday, May 10, they had two elevens in the field, the first eleven playing the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, and the second eleven meeting the second eleven of King's College at Greenwich. In both these matches, also, the College were victorious. From lack of time they had to be decided by the result of the first innings. The sailors are at a great disadvantage in all games from the difficulty they have in keeping a team together long enough to get any familiarity with each other's style of play. The College gives the best opportunity, but even there the season only lasts about six weeks. Of the men who played against the Academy on Saturday last, few had seen each other in the cricket field before, but, in spite of this serious drawback, the fielding was that of a trained and long-practised eleven—such fielding as one seldom sees outside a school eleven. This is the first year since its foundation that the College have been able to bring out a second eleven, and their easy victory over King's College augurs well for the hopes of the Navy during their short season.

The Duke of Edinburgh landed at Portsmouth on Tuesday, and after visiting the Admiral-Superintendent and Sir Geoffrey Hornby, and reporting himself to the Admiralty, proceeded to Eastwell Park. He left London on Thursday night on a visit to the Queen.

Some little time back an Admiralty Order was promulgated calling attention to the irregularity of officers using stamps for their signatures instead of signing their names. This order, says the Portsmouth Times, when promulgated at Devonport, whether from accident or irony is not known, was, strange to relate, impressed with a lithographic signature of the Commander-in-Chief. The officials at Whitehall evidently regard precept as being far in advance of practice, as most of the documents which emanate therefrom are stamped with what is supposed to be the signature of the secretary or assistant-secretary. This leaves open a wide field for abuse, and is probably the cause of many of the vexatious orders which find their way on board her Majesty's ships, irresponsible clerks being thus enabled to shield themselves behind the assumed signature of their responsible superiors.

The Watchful, at Devonport, is shortly expected to be commissioned for service as tender to the Channel Squadron, in lieu of the Forward, ordered to the West Coast to relieve the Starling. The Watchful is better suited for this work than the Forward, having engines of considerable power and good storage capacity for mails and despatches.

The Portsmouth Times understands, upon good authority, "that Capt. Fullerton, of the Sapphire, has been selected for the command of the Victoria and Albert, on the retirement of Capt. Thomson."

The interior of the forecastle of the troopship Himalaya, in which the crew live and sleep, has just been very prettily improved at the entire expense of the executive officer, Lieut. Protheroe. To relieve the monotony of the fittings on either side the first lieutenant has purchased a dozen very chastely framed mirrors, and placed them at regular distances on both the port and starboard sides of that part of the vessel occupied by the crew. Not only is the innovation attractive to the eye, but useful to the men, who fully appreciate the kindliness which prompted the gift. It is not every officer who can afford the expense, and many a poor fellow becomes unpopular in consequence, merely from inability "to do as others did."

The annual general meeting of the Royal Naval School will be held in the Royal United Service Institution, on Thursday, the 22nd inst., at 3 o'clock precisely; Admiral the Hon. A. Duncombe, in the chair. The Council's annual report will be furnished on and after the 8th inst., to those members of the corporation who may apply for it to the secretary.

Col. Tuson, in his reports, spoke in the highest terms of the bravery of Lieut. Frederick White, of the Plymouth Division. "We are surprised," says the Hampshire Telegraph, "to observe that no mention of this young officer's name is to be found in Gen. Graham's despatch. That this is an accidental omission is most probable; if so, it is to be hoped that steps will be at once taken to rectify the matter. Too much cannot be made in the interest of the individual most concerned, and for the encouragement of others, of displays of pluck and energy by young officers, whether they belong to the Army, Navy, or Royal Marines."

The Admiralty have ordered newspapers to be sent weekly for the Marines serving in Egypt.

The old Erebus having been purchased by Messrs. Castle and Sons, left Portsmouth on Saturday morning for the Thames. She was built by Messrs. Napier in 1856, but was never employed. The hull and engine cost £82,000.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS, Etc.

D. H. F.—We are assured the arrangement you suggest would be impracticable.

M. B.—The term "Naval Brigade" applies solely to sailors disembarked under their officers to take part in operations in concert with a military force on shore against an enemy. The levée en masse of the Athenians to attack the Island of Mitylene or Lesbos had nothing in common with the composition of a "Naval Brigade," except that the soldiers were carried to the scene of their services in ships. It was not unusual for the Greeks to wear earrings, but the texts you quote do not show that Pluto was a member of a Naval Brigade, and that he wore earrings because he was so.

INQUISITIVE.—They are not.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—COUGHS, INFLUENZA.—The soothing properties of these medicaments render them well worthy of trial in all diseases of the lungs. In common colds and influenza the Pills taken internally and the Ointment rubbed externally are exceedingly efficacious. When influenza is epidemic this treatment is easiest, safest, and surest. Holloway's Pills and Ointment purify the blood, remove all obstructions to its free circulation through the lungs, relieve the overgorged air tubes, and render respiration free without reducing the strength, irritating the nerves, or depressing the spirits. Such are the ready means of saving suffering when afflicted with colds, coughs, bronchitis, and other complaints by which so many are seriously and permanently afflicted in most countries.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

COUGHS,
COLDS,
ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See the Times, July 13th, 1864.

TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

CHOLERA,
DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of Diarrhœa."

From SYMES and CO., Simla:

Dear Sir,—We congratulate you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, his Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of

From Mr. J. J. Harris, Schoolmaster, 2-18 The Royal Irish Regiment, Aldershot, September 22, 1880:—"I am very much pleased with everything I have had from your Company. OUT of the desert of the Soudan there has blossomed a grateful and plentiful crop of honours. A Special Supplement of the London Gazette has given effect to rumours which have been for some time in circulation with regard to the intention of the Government to deal in a very liberal spirit with the officers of the Navy and of the Army who were engaged under General Graham in the fighting excursion for the relief of Tokar, and in the "chastisement," as it is called, of Osman Digna. It is not improbable that the temporary step of rank given to Sir William Hewett, whilst in command of the East Indies station, will be made permanent in due season. It seems somewhat strange that there should be no reward, such as was given to the Army, for any of the officers and men of the Naval Brigade for conspicuous bravery, with the exception of Captain Wilson. Commander Rolfe's step was won thoroughly, for by common consent it is admitted no one worked harder or better in moments of great stress and trial. The promotion of Lieutenants Graham and Conybeare and of Sub-Lieutenant Henderson could not well have been withheld, even if there could have been the smallest desire on the part of anyone to deny these gallant young fellows an adequate recognition of what they have done; and the Medical Department of the Navy may well be proud of the reputation and of the promotion of such officers as Staff Surgeon Martin, Surgeon Cross, and Surgeon Gimlette. From what we had read and heard, we had thought that other officers who had done gallantly and well would have been promoted for their meritorious services at El Teb and elsewhere, in addition to Major Tucker, but perhaps their turn will come; and meantime, the exertions of the officers afloat have obtained for Lieutenant Biggs and Morris the rank of Commanders, the promotion of Navigating Lieutenant Hire as Staff Commander, and of Chief Engineer Crook to be Inspector of Machinery; and—we rejoice to say—one step in the Paymasters' List, by the promotion of Mr. Bell to be Paymaster. With respect to the Army, although Lieutenant-General Stephenson had nothing at all to do with the actual operations in the field, he was, nevertheless, senior officer of her Majesty's troops in Egypt; and on him devolved a great deal of the cares and responsibility connected with the equipment of Sir Gerald Graham's expedition. No one will question the propriety of the reward which has fallen to so good a soldier as Lieutenant-General Sir F. C. A. Stephenson, whose career of service, from the Crimea down to the present time, has been eminently practical, useful, and satisfactory. Should the talked-of expedition be directed against the Mahdi in the autumn, it seems to us, and we believe to far better judges than we can pretend to be of the fitness of officers for command, that General Stephenson on the spot has claims for consideration to lead such a force, which cannot and ought not to be put on one side. Sir Herbert Stewart cannot be said to have got too much out of the work he did, but it was believed that he would have received a more substantial reward. However, his full Colonelcy and K.C.B. are not bad at his age, even if his past services are regarded as they ought to be with admiration. It would be difficult to pass over Major-General Davis in the distribution of the C.B.'s; and Colonel Wood, of the 10th Hussars, displayed so much conduct, coolness, and courage, that he completely justified the good opinion of his friends, and thoroughly earned the mark of his Sovereign's favour. Colonel Robinson, of the Royal Irish Fusiliers; Lieutenant-Colonel Byam, of the 65th; Lieutenant-Colonel Green, of the 42nd Highlanders; Lieutenant-Colonel Ardagh, of the Royal Engineers; and Lieutenant-Colonel Barrow, of the 19th Hussars, are officers whose merits and services in the field have been conspicuous. But it is especially agreeable to us to note that such a gallant soldier as William Green, who has risen solely by his own merit to the command of the splendid regiment which is proud to follow him, has had at last the opportunity of signalling himself out for such a mark of the Queen's approbation as he has just received. It would be an impertinence for us to eulogise such soldiers as Colonel Clery, Lieutenant-Colonel Ardagh, or Lieutenant-Colonel Barrow, the latter of whom will for a long time to come, we fear, have often to think over the wound for which his C.B. is some compensation. The Army Medical Department has found in Brigade-Surgeon McDowell a distinguished officer, whose reward will be recognised as his due by all who are acquainted with his work in the field; and the excellence of the Commissariat Department and the Transport Staff are acknowledged in the person of Assistant-Commissary-General Nugent, who receives the honour of being named a C.B. of the Military Division of the Bath. Elsewhere will be found a detail of the services which are considered to have entitled Captain Wilson, Lieutenant Marling, Quartermaster Marshall, and Private Edwards to the decoration of the Victoria Cross, and it will be admitted by all that the recital of their conspicuous bravery fully justifies the distinction. Sir G. Graham won his spurs long ago, and now, after a long career, honours which no one envies him, and, as far as his distinguished service is concerned, no one disputes, are tumbling upon him. But it is generally thought, we believe, that in the handling of a composite force it might be desirable hereafter to associate with General Graham an officer of more experience in the tactical direction of the three arms, especially of the infantry; and such a one will certainly be found in Sir R. H. Buller, now promoted, for distinguished service in the field, Major-General. Without invidious comparisons or distinctions, we may express the satisfaction which, we believe, is shared by the service at the promotion of Colonel Clery, Colonel Hammill, Major Brabazon, 10th Hussars; Major Holley, Royal Artillery; Major Colwell, R.M.L.I.; Major Gough, 10th Hussars; Major Walker, 42nd Highlanders; Captain Brophy, 42nd Highlanders; Captain Green, Royal Engineers; Captain Jenkins, 19th Hussars; Captain Slade, Royal Artillery; and at the steps given to the officers of the Commissariat Staff, Rainsford and Hamilton; and to the Veterinary Department, Clayton and Thomson, Quartermaster N. Wright and Quartermaster Mahoney, who are well entitled to their honorary rank of Captain. Father Brindle, we suppose, established his claims to some recognition which was not accorded to his brother Chaplains. On the whole, the crop of honours is ample, but there are many who think it might have been larger. Long may the recipients live to wear them, with more to come. But if the desert of Suakim yields such a harvest, what may be expected out of the saharas of Khartoum and the valleys of the White and of the Blue Nile.

THE first recommendation of the Committee, that the present class of male civilian nurses be abolished, and that there be substituted a trained Naval Sick-berth Staff for service afloat and ashore, was only to be expected after the discovery of the gross incapacity disclosed in the first part of the Committee's report, already dealt with in these columns. In the opinion of the Committee, the proposed Sick-berth Staff should be recruited, as far as possible, from boys who have been educated at Greenwich Hospital School. This is a wise suggestion, as it provides an outlet for the School; but it is questionable whether a sufficient number of boys will avail themselves of the opening thus created for them. The Committee recommend, in the event of their not doing so, that boys between fifteen and sixteen years of age be entered from the shore. But, wherever the lads come from, the Committee consider it of the greatest importance that they should first join one of the training-ships as second-class boys, under the same regulations as other youngsters, as they would thus be initiated in Naval life, habits, and discipline. A notation should be made against their names in the ship's books to the effect that they are intended for the Sick-berth Staff; and although messed, trained, and paid as other boys, they would be retained in the advanced school classes, and not passed out as boys are at present. They would also undergo a course of instruction sketched out by Captain Wilson, Inspector of Training-ships, and be exempt from sail drill aloft and heavy-gun drill below. All other drills calculated to develope intelligence, promote discipline, and fit the boys for a life in the Navy, will be kept up, and much time will be spent with the schoolmaster during the eighteen months it is proposed to keep these lads on board the training-ships. It is further recommended that they should enter the first-class rating at the age of seventeen, and then be discharged to the guard-ship at Portsmouth, for preliminary training in the duties of tending the sick and wounded at Haslar Hospital. In the opinion of the Committee, while at the hospital the boys should receive systematic instruction in elementary anatomy, bandaging and dressing wounds, and exercises in rendering the first aid to the wounded; the instructor to be one of the junior medical officers of the hospital, to whom a slight increase of pay would be granted, with regularly qualified dispensers to assist him. The boys would also have to go through a course of cookery both in the kitchen and sick-room. If found necessary, a certain number of them might be drafted to Plymouth Hospital to learn nursing and dressing; and all, on attaining the age of eighteen, will have to undergo an examination, when, if found qualified, they will be rated Sick-berth Attendants, with pay amounting to 1s. 4d. a day. After spending another six months at the hospital, these Attendants would be considered fit for service afloat, and would be placed on the roster for draft. Those lads unable to qualify as Attendants, will be discharged to the shore, unless they are suitable for other ratings and chose to volunteer for them. Having settled these points, the members of the Committee turned their attention to the organisation of this new Nursing Staff afloat, and recommend that the Attendants be divided into classes, the Attendant having, after three years' service, to pass an examination before he can become a Second-class Steward, equal to a Second-class Petty Officer, with pay of 1s. 9d. a day, rising to 2s. after three years' service in that rating. When promoted to Sick-berth Steward of the First-class, he will rank with a Petty officer of that class and draw 2s. 5d. a day pay. His salary will increase every three years, until he receives 3s. 6d. a day. Promotions to be by seniority in actual vacancies, and contingent on good character and passing the required examinations. The Committee have drawn up a most efficient scheme for keeping these men on a roster for foreign service, which enables them to be employed in the hospitals at Haslar, Plymouth, Chatham, &c., when not actually serving afloat. They estimate that 396 men will be required for service ashore and afloat. As a reward for good conduct and efficiency, the Committee recommend the creation of a special rating—for service only in the hospitals—of Chief Sick-berth Steward, to rank with a Chief Petty Officer, and to be open to Stewards, after fourteen years' good service. These men would fill the position of Ward Masters, drawing pay up to 4s. 6d. a day. Pensions are also recommended after twenty-two years' service. Retirement to be compulsory at the age of fifty for all but Ward Masters, who would be allowed to serve five years longer. The members of this corps of nurses to wear a blue cloth uniform and the Geneva cross, and be entitled to good-conduct badges. The Committee also propose that a limited staff of sisters be employed in certain hospitals, who, in addition to their nursing duties, shall train the youths of the Sick-berth Staff; and that the hospitals be reorganised and divided into sections for nursing duties. The Committee also suggest improvements in the diet allowed to officers, and in the culinary arrangements generally,—not a day before such improvements were wanted. In making these suggestions and recommendations, the increased cost has not been overlooked. A careful computation places the additional expense in maintaining an efficient trained nursing staff for the Navy at the small sum of £2,500 a year,—a mere bagatelle, which the Treasury cannot refuse. No doubt, the pension question may frighten their Lordships, but as the Committee point out, the adoption of their scheme will not only utilise the unemployed men who, under the present want of system, are always waiting draft in the depôt ships, and by the reduction of entries consequent on the extension of the term of service, but enable the Admiralty to reduce the number of Medical officers authorised by Order in Council of April 1, 1881, by an additional ten, it having been found in practice that this number can be dispensed with, in consequence of alterations in complements and the care bestowed in revising the Medical Staff of the Navy. These reductions would of themselves more than cover any increased charge ever likely to accrue from the adoption of the Committee's proposals; and it is, therefore, to be hoped, that, in the interests of the Navy, the Admiralty will not allow any delay to arise in giving expression to the recommendation of a Committee whose members, one and all, have done their work in such a thorough, painstaking, and efficient manner.
